April prices jump .8%

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government said today a steep increase in farm prices pushed wholesale prices up eight-tenths of a per cent during April, marking the biggest gain in six months and signalling a sharper rise in the cost of living ahead.

The increase ended five months of relatively stable wholesale prices and was an abrupt break in the steady stream of upbeat economic reports this year.

Declining farm prices during the first three months of the year had held down the over-all wholesale price index. But in April, farm prices jumped 4.2 per cent while the index for processed foods was up 1.9 per cent. This produced a 2.8 per cent increase in the agricultural sector.

Wholesale price changes eventually are reflected in retail prices, although there are time lags and relationships are not precise.

Industrial prices rose three-tenths of a per cent last month, continuing the moderating trend of recent months. However, the April report did not reflect recently announced increases for steel and other products which will show up later as they work their way through the wholesale price chain.

Economists consider industrial prices a more reliable barometer of basic inflationary trends rather than farm prices which often move erratically.

The Ford administration has warned that the sharp slowdown in both wholesale and consumer inflation during the first quarter could not be expected to continue.

April's eight-tenths of a per cent rise in the wholesale price index followed an increase of only two-tenths of a per cent in March and declines in both January and February. It was the sharpest monthly increase since October's 1.1 per cent rise.

White House economists expect an inflation rate at the consumer level of about 6 per cent this year, an improvement over the 7 per cent rise in 1975 and well below the sharp 12.2 per cent advance in 1974.

During the first three months of this year wholesale prices fell at an annual rate of 1.8 per cent while retail prices rose at an annual rate of 2.9 per cent, the smallest quarterly increase in almost four years.

In April, the wholesale price index stoo at 181.3, up 5.3 per cent over a year earlier. That meant that goods selling at wholesale for $100 in the 1967 base period cost $181.30 last year.

Farm price increases were the largest in a year. The biggest increases were for livestock, eggs and coffee. However, there were some declines for grains, live poultry and milk.

The Labor Department said higher prices for beef, veal, fish and roasted coffee were largely responsible for a rise in the index for processed foods and feeds.

Garrison may end fight

ASHLAND, Miss. (AP) — The attorney for Dr. Norman Garrison Jr. of Corinth said today that Garrison would be acquitted of murdering his former wife in Missouri if forced to stand trial in that state.

Attorney John B Farese Sr. of Ashland said he would decide today whether to continue legal efforts to block Garrison's extradition to Missouri.

Garrison is wanted in Missouri for the Sept. 8, 1974 beating and shooting death of Lee Ann Garrison, whose body was found in a bedroom of her Kennett, Mo., home.

U.S. District Court Judge William C. Keady ruled last Friday that Garrison, 34, should be turned over to Marshall County authorities for return to Missouri, but stayed the order until May 10 to allow time for appeal.

Keady allowed Garrison to remain free on a $100,000 bond pending appeal, and Farese said today that he had filed notice of appeal with the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

"I haven't really made up my mind definitely" whether to follow through with the appeal, Farese said. "I'm ready for trial now."

Farese said he felt "some newly discovered evidence, which I'm not free to discuss, will result in acquittal" should Garrison stand trial.

"But there is still the question of whether we want to go to trial now or just continue to fight extradition," he said. "I'm going to make up my mind on that this afternoon."

Garrison won a lower state court ruling blocking his extradition, but the Mississippi Supreme Court recently held that he should be turned over to Missouri authorities. The physician then filed a writ of habeas corpus with Keady.

Keady said he would grant no further delays in extradition because this would "be contrary to the public interest in the prompt administration of justice in extradition proceedings...and the ends of justice will be best served by denial of any stay behond the 10-day period."

The primary contention of Garrison's lawyers in their appeal to Keady was that the state of Missouri had failed to produce evidence showing probable cause, or a statement of allegations against the physician. Garrison claims that he was on a houseboat at Pickwick Lake in northeast Mississippi at the time of his former wife's death.

Keady said Missouri had found probable cause of Garrison's arrest by its issuance of an arrest warrant.

Bond hears campaign bill plea

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. (AP) — Gov. Christopher S. Bond was called on today to sign a revision of reporting provisions in the state's new Campaign Practices Act as "an important step towards stemming the tide of candidate apathy."

In a letter to the governor, Secretary of State James C. Kirkpatrick said he shared Bond's concern over provisions of the bill that would weaken the economic disclosure requirements of the law.

But the state's chief election official said the need to exempt thousands of minor candidates from any economic reporting requirements outweighs the negative aspects of the measure.

The bill, passed in the final moments of the legislative session last week, would exempt candidates spending less than $500 in a campaign from reporting income sources and economic holdings.

But in clearing up that problem, which threatens the state Elections Commission with a "flood of unnecessary paperwork," the legislature also replaced the stringent economic disclosure requirements with disclosure provisions now applicable to lawmakers, considered by many to be ineffective.

Bond has indicated he will veto the bill because it weakens the disclosure requirements for major political candidates. Even if he would sign it, however, it would not take effect until after the Aug. 3 primary, requiring all candidates for political office through then to comply with the present provisions.

"The number of candidates who have filed for public office has reached a record low," Kirkpatrick told the governor. "A number of qualified potential candidates are refusing to run for local office (mostly unpaid) because of the strictures of the law."

He restated his support for a strict conflict of interest law covering major candidates, elected officials and appointed officials and removal of all disclosure provisions from the campaign law.

—Creation of a technology corps of businessmen and university professors to help train the Third World in specific development programs.

—Creation of energy and industrialization institutes to spread scientific information.

Russell has also been charged with the breaking and entering of Hazel's Service Station, also located in Morley.

Search for boy organized

A search in an area south of Highway 60 on Brown Spur Road was organized by Sikeston police today in an attempt to locate Kenneth Brian Davis, 6, of 1714 Ford St., who has been missing from his home since Friday.

A report that the child had been seen in the Brown Spur Road area sometime Monday spurred the latest search effort, which was conducted by off-duty as well as on-duty police officers, juvenile officers, the Sikeston Fire Department, Miner police officers and citizens band radio operators.

The boy is described as three feet, three inches tall and weighing 59 pounds with medium build and fair complextion. He is Negro and has brown hair and brown eyes.

Five injured in 3 accidents

Five persons were injured — one seriously — in three traffic accidents that occurred today and Wednesday on area roads, according to the highway patrol.

A Hayti man was seriously injured in a car-truck accident at 8 a.m. today on Route A at the junction of Route P, two miles east of Wardell.

Montie E. Gilmore, 68, of Hayti, driver of a pickup truck, was seriously injured, and a passenger, Joyce Gilmore, 28, of Hayti, and the driver of the car, Barbara Sue Freeman, 25, of Clarkton, received minor injuries.

The highway patrol said the accident occurrred when Gilmore, who was turning left on Route A, failed to yield the right-of-way and drove into the path of the eastbound Freeman car, causing it to strike the Gilmore truck broadside.

Ford hope for 1st ballot win ends

WASHINGTON (AP) — Key political advisers to President Ford are growing increasingly pessimistic about his chances of arriving at the GOP National Convention with enough votes for a first-ballot victory, and some are concerned he could lose his own state's primary.

After Ronald Reagan's dramatic resurgence, Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan., said Wednesday he didn't think either Ford or Reagan would reach the convention with the 1,130 votes needed for nomination.

And at a news conference on Wednesday, Ford acknowledged he is reviewing his campaign strategy, and he backed away from his earlier predictions of a first-ballot victory, saying only, "I think we'll go to Kansas City and win."

After four straight primary wins — Texas on Saturday and Indiana, Georgia, and Alabama on Tuesday — Reagan has 360 committed delegate votes to 292 committed to Ford. There are 329 uncommitted Republican delegates. There are 1,278 delegates yet to be chosen. It will take 1,130 votes for nomination at the convention in Kansas City this August.

Ford declined to predict what might happen in the remaining primaries, but he said, "We're going to win our full share."

But Dole, a former GOP national chairman, said he thinks Reagan is ahead in Nebraska, which votes next Tuesday. In nonprimary states, he said he expects Reagan to do well in Wyoming and sweep Oklahoma.

Even Michigan, Ford's home state, is now regarded as questionable. Michigan law permits crossover voting where members of one party can vote in the other party's primary. In Texas and Indiana, two other crossover states, Reagan defeated Ford with the aid of Democratic votes, many apparently from former George Wallace supporters.

Senate GOP Whip Robert F. Griffin of Michigan said he is concerned about Ford's chances in the May 18 Michigan voting, and White House Press Secretary Ron Nessen, said, "I'd be kidding you if I didn't say there is a concern the President could lose Michigan."

Much of the advice being given Ford urges him to get off the defensive and spend less time responding to attacks by Reagan.

At his news conference, Ford appeared to be trying out the advice. He said he thought he had winning issues in that "we are at peace," that the economy was improving and that he had restored trust and confidence in the executive branch of government.

The Reagan surge has made some Republicans concerned that their convention in August could be one of the most divisive in many years.

Sen. Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., said if neither Ford nor Reagan gets the nomination on the first or second ballot, "you can look for the awfullest bloodletting you've seen at a Republican convention in years and years and decades and decades."

Meanwhile, Vice President Nelson A. Rockefeller, who seemed to be the party's forgotten man only a few weeks ago, appeared to have new stature as head of a large bloc of uncommitted New York delegates.

Rockefeller, who was squeezed out of consideration as a possible running-mate for Ford, said in Los Angeles on Wednesday he still believes Ford will defeat Reagan, whom he labeled an "extremist."

New York's Republican chairman, Richard Rosenbaum, acknowledged that the bulk of the delegation would probably support Ford in a contest with Reagan, but there were some Rockefeller allies, chafing over his treatment as vice president, who were mentioning the prospect of a Rockefeller Cabinet appointment, another vice presidential bid or even a run for the presidency.

Meanwhile, a Rockefeller aide noted the changes in the Ford-Reagan race and, carefully saying Rockefeller still backs Ford, observed, "It's an interesting situation. His (Rockefeller's) position is the same, but the delegate situation certainly has changed."

In other developments Wednesday:

—Former Georgia Gov. Jimmy Carter, frontrunner in the race for the Democratic nomination, relaxed at home in Plains, Ga., and planned to fly to Newark today to campaign for New Jersey's June 8 primary.

—Reagan headed for Louisiana after campaigning for 36 hours in Nebraska. His agenda for today listed stops in Shreveport, New Orleans and Baton Rouge.

Two hundred years ago, a group of Americans pledged "our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor" to the proposition that "all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. . ."

For many handicapped Americans, that pledge is still unredeemed. It's hard to achieve liberty in a wheelchair, hard to pursue happiness on crutches. It requires help, as we unfortunately tend to forget.

One organization that does not forget, and has been helping since 1902, is Goodwill Industries. Goodwill's rehabilitation and training enable the handicapped to become self-supporting, self-respecting individuals, and it is appropriate to honor this good work now because May 2-8 is National Goodwill Week.

It is also an appropriate time for a reminder that Goodwill's effectiveness depends on your support. When you help Goodwill, you help some handicapped person to make his own declaration of independence.

Surely that's a worthwhile Bicentennial project.

He wants to select his own reading matter.
He wants to provide for his own old age.
He wants to make his own contracts.

He wants to compete freely in the market place.
He wants to grow by his own efforts.

He wants to take part in the competition of ideas.
He wants to be a man of good will.

What kind of a nut is he? He's an American who understands and believes in the Declaration of Independence, that's what kind.

Aren't you glad you are too? And don't you wonder why so many of our fellow Americans are trying so hard to destroy the kind of life that has made us the aim and envy of every other people on earth.

The question is: What kind of nuts are they?

FOR SAFER ROADS

Every highway-rail grade crossing holds a potential for serious accidents. It is a legitimate concern of government at every level, and now grade crossing safety has become a new national priority. For the first time in history, federal Highway Trust Fund money is authorized specifically for rail-highway crossing safety projects. Another historic first is the availability of federal money for crossing projects off the federal-aid highway systems.

The Association of American Railroads has issued a brief pamphlet directed to local authorities for the purpose of making local leaders aware of federal money that can now be obtained to assist in removing the perils of rail-highway crossings. "The purpose of this pamphlet," says the AAR in an introductory note, "is to provide...a guide for follow-up action at local and state levels." Special attention is called to the Federal-Aid Safer Roads Demonstration Program, created by Section 230 of the Highway Act of 1973. The Act authorizes $250 million in funds for improvements to correct designated safety hazards on public streets or roads not included on any federal-aid system. The authorization covers a three-year period. The money is intended primarily for use by local authorities on safety projects for which other state or federal funds are not available. The elimination of hazards at railroad-highway grade crossings are among the projects eligible for inclusion in the Demonstration Program.

Removing grade-crossing dangers is a recognized obligation of government. As funds are made available for this purpose, it is incumbent upon state and local authorities to cooperate as closely as possible with federal efforts to carry out that obligation.

AN ENCOURAGING VIEW

The noted financial columnist, Sylvia Porter, foresees a shift in the direction of tax reform back toward tax incentives. In other words, tax policies that had intended to discourage capital growth--raising of new money for needed plant and facilities--may be going out of vogue as the realities of shortages strike home. It is to be hoped this view is correct.

One spur to "incentive" tax reform, in the words of Ms. Porter, "...is the mounting realization that our country imposes the heaviest tax burden in the entire world on capital formation and capital gains." Taxing capital to death and crippling the stock market hits every worker in the country. As former U.S. Treasury official Charles E. Walker puts it, when "...saving is taxed too heavily, people won't save as much, they won't invest enough, and there won't be enough jobs for our rapidly growing labor force." It takes some $25,000 to $30,000 in business investment to pay for the machinery used by one typical production worker.

The energy shortage will have done the country a favor if it helps spread an understanding of facts such as these--facts about the interdependence of capital, the stock market and jobs, all of which are essential to high production and high standards of living. Tax reformers who want to further penalize successful investors with such things as another increase in the capital gains tax are off the track and out of tune with today's economic realities.

A LITTLE BRIGHTER

In an optimistic vein, a spokesman for the electric utility industry has observed that his industry "...continues to represent an attractive opportunity for the commitment of investment funds." For despite the fact that there is concern in some financial quarters and utility stocks are selling at low levels, the need for electric service will continue to increase--and the industry will, if given the chance, grow to meet that need. Apparently, the underlying cause is a spreading realization throughout the country that the use of electricity generated by the nation's reserves of coal and uranium can relieve the pressures caused by shortages of oil and natural gas.

The equivalent of about 10 percent of the personal savings in the United States is now involved in the outside financing of utility companies. To support the building of needed new facilities, the utility spokesman looks toward a trend of about 15 percent. The heart of the matter is whether utility industry earnings will be sufficient to attract investors--or to put it bluntly, will utility regulatory commissions allow utility companies to earn adequate rates of return? On this, the utility industry leader observed, "it appears in general that commissions appreciate the needs of electric utilities both for rate increases and automatic adjustment clauses."

In short, signs are growing that regulatory bodies and the public are ready to accept the fact that no industry and no business can be expected to absorb the costs of inflation. Inflation is a cross everyone must bear equally. Only by doing so can the light of hope, progress and investment in basic industries continue to burn.

SELF-HELP OR SERFDOM

The federal government is having one devil of a time figuring out its own problems ranging from balancing its budget to instilling a proper sense of public responsibility and ethical behavior in all levels of its own hierarchy. It has neither the money, the expertise nor the people to solve every state, local or individual citizen's problem that comes along.

It has been encouraging in recent months to see new signs of problem-solving initiative showing up at nonfederal levels. An example is to be found in California. There a statewide, toll-free, around-the-clock telephone alert system has been established to speed notification of state agencies should an oil spill occur. Any person observing what they believe to be an oil spill anywhere in California can use a toll-free number to notify by telephone the state Office of Emergency Services located in Sacramento, the state capital.

In the United States today, the message is clear--it is self-help or serfdom. That message should be taken to heart by state, county and local governments and, most importantly, by every individual person in the U. S. who values his freedom.

THE PRESS AND THE CIA

WASHINGTON— The Church Report on the CIA revealed that many newspapermen were on the CIA payrolls and some of them still are. The report refused to name names so one has only his own suspicions to go on as to who is still a journalist as well as a part-time agent.

The other day I was in the city room of a large metropolitan newspaper. I glanced over the shoulder of a friend who was typing, "The quick brown fox jumped over the lazy dog, the quick brown fox jumped over the lazy dog, the quick brown fox jumped over the lazy dog."

"That's a pretty good lead for a story," I commented. "Where do you go from there?"

He immediately covered it up with his arm. "You weren't supposed to see that," he said angrily.

"Why not? I think it's a great story. I haven't heard of a quick brown fox jumping over a lazy dog in years."

"It's not really a story about a quick brown fox. I just got a tip from Vice President Rockefeller's office that there are 400 Communists working in Sen. Everett Dirksen's office."

"Dirksen's dead."

"Yes, that's what makes the story interesting. Why would the Commies have 400 agents working for a dead senator?"

"But how would the reader know the story about the quick brown fox has to do with the Rockefeller leak about the Commies?"

"The copy boy decodes it."

"You mean he works for 'the company' too?"

"Sure. If he didn't and I handed in this lead he'd throw me out the window. But for heaven's sakes, don't let on that you know because the news editor would get in terrible trouble with the managing editor, who in turn would catch it from the editor."

"Don't tell me they all work for the CIA ?"

"It's hard to say. My only contact is with the copy boy who picks up a page from the floor as I crumple it up and throw it away. Where it goes from there I have no idea."

"Does the editor know you work for the CIA on the side?"

"I'm not sure. The other day he called me in an gave me a fountain pen that squirted LSD. He said he wanted me to interview the man in the street with it."

"What did he want the man in the street to say?"

"He said it didn't matter. He was more interested in how the pen worked."

"You did it, of course."

"Certainly. It was either that or take my cyanide pill."

"You carry cyanide pills?"

"Doesn't every reporter? Suppose you were covering a fire and you were stopped by a fire marshal and he asked you what you were doing there. You'd either tell him or take the pill."

"Doesn't it get confusing to work for two masters?" I asked.

"No, actually it works to your advantage. I got a Pulitzer Prize last year for this story."

He showed it to me and I started reading, "Now is the time for all good men to come to the aid of their country, now is the time for all good men to come to the aid o their country, now is the time for all good men to come to the aid of their country, now is the time. . . ."

"You got a Pulitze Prize for this?" I said.

"How would anyone know?"

"Four of the five editors on the jury worked for the CIA and they figured they might as well give the prize to one of their own."

Agency Running Wild:
Equal Employment Opportunity Commission staffers charged with corruption and stirring race antagonism

WASHINGTON — Rarely have so many government insiders refused to talk candidly, even on any background basis, about the civil war screeching through the $80 million-a-year federal agency created to obtain "equal employment" for minorities and women.

Despite this sensitivity over "getting involved," knowledgeable sources drop enough information to substantiate the report that the runaway, virtually autonomous Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) is rotten with mismanagement, zealotry, some bigotry, some corruption, bloc rivalries, duelling among blacks, Spanish-surnamed officials, women, Orientals and American Indians. But basically the most bitter charge is that of reverse discrimination – blocking of advancement by whites inside the EEOC itself as well as the federal government. Especially on promotions, known as "upward mobility."

This turmoil has brought in the Oval Office itself, the FBI, the General Accounting Office (GAO), the House Equal Opportunities subcommittee chaired by California's black Congressman Gus Hawkins, and Sen. Pete Williams' Senate Labor Committee. Hawkins himself will hold hearings on "serious misconduct" by some EEOC officials and "serious management deficiencies" disclosed by audits of 32 district offices.

For years now the EEOC has been wallowing in inefficiency and overspending. One investigator reports that "the whole thing is one of the most screwed up agencies ever created in the past 10 years ... it is a source of fantastic frustration ... it has a shoe-box system of keeping records and last year the Senate Appropriations Committee and GAO had to move in because the EEOC spent a million dollars more than they actually had. This is a very serious matter."

The commission reportedly is wide open. Recently one of its own officials was arrested for attempting to sell equipment, stolen from the EEOC itself, to the camouflaged police fencing operation called Big Sting.

The commission hasn't been able to keep a chairman. There have been six in the past 10 years. Now, the distinguished black Detroiter Lowell Perry, named by President Ford himself to straighten out the weird agency, is quitting, though Perry denied this just a few weeks ago. Disgusted, he's going to Chrysler as a high-priced executive.

In the words of one prober, one of the most principled men in government, the EEOC rank and file appears determined to fight a racial war inside the government as well as in the outer world. Each minority bloc screams at the other, charging the other is either self-servingly black-oriented or Spanish-name-biased. Or anti-female. One high EEOC official actually told a conference that the second and third echelon would make policy because "chairmen come and go."

It's all sort of a lost world affecting huge federal contracts and millions of workers.

For example, the government awarded some $50 billion worth of contracts in 1974 to non-construction firms for needed services and supplies. These covered 25 million jobs. All this comes under equal employment codes. And that's just the beginning.

It's all so messed up and interwoven in rivalries that there are no uniform guidelines. Not too long ago an Equal Employment Opportunity Coordinating Council was created-- consisting of the Justice Department, Labor Department, U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, the U.S. Civil Service Commission and the EEOC-- which almost immediately began boycotting the council sessions and efforts to set up reasonable codes for employers.

These covered job application tests, the radius, by miles, within which a corporation must develop affirmative action programs and the delivery of such codes in writing for approval by some federal equal opportunity enforcement agency.

But the EEOC had other plans. It was determined to accumulate "cases." There are more than 125,000 complaints on hand now.

Some in EEOC want to stack these up and go after a "pattern of discrimination" as a prelude to class action suits. There have been two or three such massive actions costing industries many millions of dollars.

As one official put it: "Of course there are violations of the codes and theory but the day is over for mass discrimination. But some of those EEOC staff people want racial and class warfare, I believe, instead of mediation."

One cabinet-level official who recently shifted to another equally high post told me the other night that the pressures are unbearable: "Mole hills are piled up into mountains and mountains into Himalayas." Also reports are that EEOC plans to hire some 200 investigators. Why? Virtually all states have some anti-discrimination agencies. Why not turn those 200 investigators over to the Health, Education and Welfare Department to search out the chiselers so the truly needy poor, the infirm and the aged can get more of what is needed?

Soon there will be a Comptroller General's report and open congressional hearings. These should end the reign of the zealots.

JACK ANDERSON SAYS:
Hughes' Political favors
with LES WHITTEN

WASHINGTON— "Everyone has his price," the late Howard Hughes once told his associate Noah Dietrich. Each election year, the eccentric billionaire tried to prove his theory by doling out hundreds of thousands of dollars to favored political candidates.

The beneficiaries of his largesse ran the political gamut from presidents to sheriffs. Usually, the money was distributed in cash, which was taken from the gaming tables of his Las Vegas casino, the Silver Slipper.

Sources close to Hughes' Nevada operation say that attorney Tom Bell passed out the big money to the gubernatorial and congressional candidates and that public relations adviser Jimmy the Greek Snyder delivered the small contributions to the local politicians.

Chester Smith, an aide to former Sen. Alan Bible, D.-Nev., explained how it worked in an interview with the Internal Revenue Service. According to a confidential IRS report, Smith stated "that sometime in September 1968, Tom Bell, an employe of the Hughes organization, gave Smith $30,000 to $80,000 in currency somewhere in downtown Las Vegas."

Smith confirmed to our associate Bob Owens that he had collected the cash and that Bible "knew about it." Smith stressed that all the money had been used in the campaign.

Like Bible, Sen. Howard Cannon, D.-Nev., also received secret cash contributions from Hughes. Evidence in the files of the Securities and Exchange Commission states that Cannon "received between $30,000 and $70,000 in contributions from the Hughes organization."

At least two separate cash deliveries were made by Bell, one to Cannon's campaign treasurer Jerome Mack, the other to Cannon's administrative assistant Chester Sobsey. A spokesman said the Senator "has never handled fund-raising personally" but "knew that the Hughes organization" had donated.

Hughes wasn't interested in the politics of the candidates he supported; he merely wanted to be sure that those in power would be friendly to his interests.

In 1968, for example, the tycoon confided in a memo to then-aide Robert Maheu: "I feel there is a really valid posibility of a Republican victory this year." Richard Nixon subsequently received at least $150,000 from Hughes.

We reported on August 6, 1971, that Hughes executive Richard Danner had delivered two $50,000 cash bundles to Nixon's seaside retreats at Key Biscayne, Fla., and San Clemente, Calif.

Our story about this secret contribution, in the opinion of some Senate Watergate investigators, so alarmed Nixon that it led to the Watergate break-in.

As the investigators have fit the jigsaw pieces together, Nixon suspected that then-Democratic National Chairman Larry O'Brien had tipped us off to the story, so the Watergate burglars were sent into O'Brien's office to find out what evidence he had hidden away about the Nixon-Hughes connection.

In the same 1971 story, we also reported that Hughes had instructed Maheu to deliver $50,000 to Hubert Humphrey during his last year as Vice President. The billionaire explained to Maheu that Humphrey could help stop the Nevada nuclear testing, which Hughes feared could keep customers away from his Las Vegas hotels and casinos.

"Why don't we get word to him," wrote Hughes, "that we will give him immedicately full, unlimited support for his campaign to enter the White House if he will just take this one on for us."

Hughes may now be dead, but his empire hasn't forgotten his political favorites. Senator Cannon, who is running for re-election this year, has collected contributions from a veritable Who's Who of the Hughes' Summa Corporation.

Under the new election reform laws, the donations are severely limited. Among the Cannon contributors are: Chester Davis, Summa general counsel, $1,000; Nadine Henley and Frank W. Gay, Summa vice presidents, $100 apiece; Hughes associate Walter Kane and publicist Perry Lieber, $100 apiece; former Hughes attorney Edward P. Morgan, $1,000, and Richard Danner, $200.

Cannon has also collected $1,000 from the Hughes Active Citizenship Fund.

In the past, other senators have also collected money from Hughes. They include Sens. Birch Bayh, D.-Ind., $1,300; Edward Brooke, R.-Mass., $1,000; Alan Cranston, D.-Calif., $6,500; Joseph Montoya, D.-N.M., $1,000; Frank Moss, D.-Utah, $1,000; Hugh Scott, R.-Pa., $500; John Tower R.-Tex., $5,000, and John Tunney, D.-Calif., $3,200.

WATCH ON WASTE: Although the Postal Service is hovering on the brink of bankruptcy, it has produced one of the most handsome annual reports in the federal government.

The 58-page glossy booklet, whose main purpose seems to be to glorify bumbling Ben Bailar, the Postmaster General, upset Sen. Richard Schweiker, R.-Pa., who asked the General Accounting Office to find out how much it cost. The answer: $21,100 for 24,000 copies, most of them unneeded.

The Act authorizes $250 million in funds for improvements to correct designated safety hazards on public streets or roads not included on any federal-aid system. The authorization covers a three-year period. The money is intended primarily for use by local authorities on safety projects for which other state or federal funds are not available. The elimination of hazards at railroad-highway grade crossings are among the projects eligible for inclusion in the Demonstration Program.

Removing grade-crossing dangers is a recognized obligation of government. As funds are made available for this purpose, it is incumbent upon state and local authorities to cooperate as closely as possible with federal efforts to carry out that obligation.

AN ENCOURAGING VIEW

The noted financial columnist, Sylvia Porter, foresees a shift in the direction of tax reform back toward tax incentives. In other words, tax policies that had intended to discourage capital growth--raising of new money for needed plant and facilities--may be going out of vogue as the realities of shortages strike home. It is to be hoped this view is correct.

One spur to "incentive" tax reform, in the words of Ms. Porter, "...is the mounting realization that our country imposes the heaviest tax burden in the entire world on capital formation and capital gains." Taxing capital to death and crippling the stock market hits every worker in the country. As former U.S. Treasury official Charles E. Walker puts it, when "...saving is taxed too heavily, people won't save as much, they won't invest enough, and there won't be enough jobs for our rapidly growing labor force." It takes some $25,000 to $30,000 in business investment to pay for the machinery used by one typical production worker.

The energy shortage will have done the country a favor if it helps spread an understanding of facts such as these--facts about the interdependence of capital, the stock market and jobs, all of which are essential to high production and high standards of living. Tax reformers who want to further penalize successful investors with such things as another increase in the capital gains tax are off the track and out of tune with today's economic realities.

CALL TO ACTION

As signs of spring appear, our winter-dulled consciousness again becomes aware of the outdoors. The green buds and sprouts make litter and the past season's debris stand out in stark contrast, and sharpen our urge to improve the landscape.

Keep America Beautiful Day, planned for April 24, offers us a wide variety of ways to channel these urges into constructive action.

This year the emphasis will be on one-day activities which initiate or dramatize long-range cooperative programs between business, industry and government. If your passion is recycling, citizen-sponsored recycling centers will be starting up. If digging turns you on, find out about tree-planting projects. Water sports fans find satisfaction in working on river and lake cleanups, and history buffs can help restore historic landmarks.

Revitalize a vacant lot, start or join an environmental education program, or clean up a neglected park. What's important is that you get involved and stay involved, so that keeping America beautiful becomes a habit, rather than a once-a-year occasion.

A LITTLE BRIGHTER

In an optimistic vein, a spokesman for the electric utility industry has observed that his industry "...continues to represent an attractive opportunity for the commitment of investment funds." For despite the fact that there is concern in some financial quarters and utility stocks are selling at low levels, the need for electric service will continue to increase--and the industry will, if given the chance, grow to meet that need. Apparently, the underlying cause is a spreading realization throughout the country that the use of electricity generated by the nation's reserves of coal and uranium can relieve the pressures caused by shortages of oil and natural gas.

The equivalent of about 10 percent of the personal savings in the United States is now involved in the outside financing of utility companies. To support the building of needed new facilities, the utility spokesman looks toward a trend of about 15 percent. The heart of the matter is whether utility industry earnings will be sufficient to attract investors--or to put it bluntly, will utility regulatory commissions allow utility companies to earn adequate rates of return? On this, the utility industry leader observed, "it appears in general that commissions appreciate the needs of electric utilities both for rate increases and automatic adjustment clauses."

In short, signs are growing that regulatory bodies and the public are ready to accept the fact that no industry and no business can be expected to absorb the costs of inflation. Inflation is a cross everyone must bear equally. Only by doing so can the light of hope, progress and investment in basic industries continue to burn.

Platform shoes increase the distance it takes to brake your car to a stop, according to a study at the University of Missouri.

Two test sessions were conducted, one in which 17 participants wore platform shoes and another in which normal shoes were worn.

Although all were accustomed to both types of shoes, their brake response time wearing platforms was .91 second, against .81 second with regular footwear, representing an increased stopping distance of 1.42 feet for each 10 miles per hour of speed.

SELF-HELP OR SERFDOM

The federal government is having one devil of a time figuring out its own problems ranging from balancing its budget to instilling a proper sense of public responsibility and ethical behavior in all levels of its own hierarchy. It has neither the money, the expertise nor the people to solve every state, local or individual citizen's problem that comes along.

It has been encouraging in recent months to see new signs of problem-solving initiative showing up at nonfederal levels. An example is to be found in California. There a statewide, toll-free, around-the-clock telephone alert system has been established to speed notification of state agencies should an oil spill occur. Any person observing what they believe to be an oil spill anywhere in California can use a toll-free number to notify by telephone the state Office of Emergency Services located in Sacramento, the state capital.

In the United States today, the message is clear--it is self-help or serfdom. That message should be taken to heart by state, county and local governments and, most importantly, by every individual person in the U. S. who values his freedom.

THE PRESS AND THE CIA

WASHINGTON— The Church Report on the CIA revealed that many newspapermen were on the CIA payrolls and some of them still are. The report refused to name names so one has only his own suspicions to go on as to who is still a journalist as well as a part-time agent.

The other day I was in the city room of a large metropolitan newspaper. I glanced over the shoulder of a friend who was typing, "The quick brown fox jumped over the lazy dog, the quick brown fox jumped over the lazy dog, the quick brown fox jumped over the lazy dog."

"That's a pretty good lead for a story," I commented. "Where do you go from there?"

He immediately covered it up with his arm. "You weren't supposed to see that," he said angrily.

"Why not? I think it's a great story. I haven't heard of a quick brown fox jumping over a lazy dog in years."

"It's not really a story about a quick brown fox. I just got a tip from Vice President Rockefeller's office that there are 400 Communists working in Sen. Everett Dirksen's office."

"Dirksen's dead."

"Yes, that's what makes the story interesting. Why would the Commies have 400 agents working for a dead senator?"

"But how would the reader know the story about the quick brown fox has to do with the Rockefeller leak about the Commies?"

"The copy boy decodes it."

"You mean he works for 'the company' too?"

"Sure. If he didn't and I handed in this lead he'd throw me out the window. But for heaven's sakes, don't let on that you know because the news editor would get in terrible trouble with the managing editor, who in turn would catch it from the editor."

"Don't tell me they all work for the CIA ?"

"It's hard to say. My only contact is with the copy boy who picks up a page from the floor as I crumple it up and throw it away. Where it goes from there I have no idea."

"Does the editor know you work for the CIA on the side?"

"I'm not sure. The other day he called me in an gave me a fountain pen that squirted LSD. He said he wanted me to interview the man in the street with it."

"What did he want the man in the street to say?"

"He said it didn't matter. He was more interested in how the pen worked."

"You did it, of course."

"Certainly. It was either that or take my cyanide pill."

"You carry cyanide pills?"

"Doesn't every reporter? Suppose you were covering a fire and you were stopped by a fire marshal and he asked you what you were doing there. You'd either tell him or take the pill."

"Doesn't it get confusing to work for two masters?" I asked.

"No, actually it works to your advantage. I got a Pulitzer Prize last year for this story."

He showed it to me and I started reading, "Now is the time for all good men to come to the aid of their country, now is the time for all good men to come to the aid o their country, now is the time for all good men to come to the aid of their country, now is the time . . . ."

"You got a Pulitze Prize for this?" I said.

"How would anyone know?"

"Four of the five editors on the jury worked for the CIA and they figured they might as well give the prize to one of their own."

JACK ANDERSON SAYS:
Hughes' Political favors
with LES WHITTEN

WASHINGTON— "Everyone has his price," the late Howard Hughes once told his associate Noah Dietrich. Each election year, the eccentric billionaire tried to prove his theory by doling out hundreds of thousands of dollars to favored political candidates.

The beneficiaries of his largesse ran the political gamut from presidents to sheriffs. Usually, the money was distributed in cash, which was taken from the gaming tables of his Las Vegas casino, the Silver Slipper.

Sources close to Hughes' Nevada operation say that attorney Tom Bell passed out the big money to the gubernatorial and congressional candidates and that public relations adviser Jimmy the Greek Snyder delivered the small contributions to the local politicians.

Chester Smith, an aide to former Sen. Alan Bible, D.-Nev., explained how it worked in an interview with the Internal Revenue Service. According to a confidential IRS report, Smith stated "that sometime in September 1968, Tom Bell, an employe of the Hughes organization, gave Smith $30,000 to $80,000 in currency somewhere in downtown Las Vegas."

Smith confirmed to our associate Bob Owens that he had collected the cash and that Bible "knew about it." Smith stressed that all the money had been used in the campaign.

Like Bible, Sen. Howard Cannon, D.-Nev., also received secret cash contributions from Hughes. Evidence in the files of the Securities and Exchange Commission states that Cannon "received between $30,000 and $70,000 in contributions from the Hughes organization."

At least two separate cash deliveries were made by Bell, one to Cannon's campaign treasurer Jerome Mack, the other to Cannon's administrative assistant Chester Sobsey. A spokesman said the Senator "has never handled fund-raising personally" but "knew that the Hughes organization" had donated.

Hughes wasn't interested in the politics of the candidates he supported; he merely wanted to be sure that those in power would be friendly to his interests.

In 1968, for example, the tycoon confided in a memo to then-aide Robert Maheu: "I feel there is a really valid posibility of a Republican victory this year." Richard Nixon subsequently received at least $150,000 from Hughes.

We reported on August 6, 1971, that Hughes executive Richard Danner had delivered two $50,000 cash bundles to Nixon's seaside retreats at Key Biscayne, Fla., and San Clemente, Calif.

Our story about this secret contribution, in the opinion of some Senate Watergate investigators, so alarmed Nixon that it led to the Watergate break-in.

As the investigators have fit the jigsaw pieces together, Nixon suspected that then-Democratic National Chairman Larry O'Brien had tipped us off to the story, so the Watergate burglars were sent into O'Brien's office to find out what evidence he had hidden away about the Nixon-Hughes connection.

In the same 1971 story, we also reported that Hughes had instructed Maheu to deliver $50,000 to Hubert Humphrey during his last year as Vice President. The billionaire explained to Maheu that Humphrey could help stop the Nevada nuclear testing, which Hughes feared could keep customers away from his Las Vegas hotels and casinos.

"Why don't we get word to him," wrote Hughes, "that we will give him immedicately full, unlimited support for his campaign to enter the White House if he will just take this one on for us."

Hughes may now be dead, but his empire hasn't forgotten his political favorites. Senator Cannon, who is running for re-election this year, has collected contributions from a veritable Who's Who of the Hughes' Summa Corporation.

Under the new election reform laws, the donations are severely limited. Among the Cannon contributors are: Chester Davis, Summa general counsel, $1,000; Nadine Henley and Frank W. Gay, Summa vice presidents, $100 apiece; Hughes associate Walter Kane and publicist Perry Lieber, $100 apiece; former Hughes attorney Edward P. Morgan, $1,000, and Richard Danner, $200.

Cannon has also collected $1,000 from the Hughes Active Citizenship Fund.

In the past, other senators have also collected money from Hughes. They include Sens. Birch Bayh, D.-Ind., $1,300; Edward Brooke, R.-Mass., $1,000; Alan Cranston, D.-Calif., $6,500; Joseph Montoya, D.-N.M., $1,000; Frank Moss, D.-Utah, $1,000; Hugh Scott, R.-Pa., $500; John Tower R.-Tex., $5,000, and John Tunney, D.-Calif., $3,200.

WATCH ON WASTE: Although the Postal Service is hovering on the brink of bankruptcy, it has produced one of the most handsome annual reports in the federal government.

The 58-page glossy booklet, whose main purpose seems to be to glorify bumbling Ben Bailar, the Postmaster General, upset Sen. Richard Schweiker, R.-Pa., who asked the General Accounting Office to find out how much it cost. The answer: $21,100 for 24,000 copies, most of them unneeded.

Agency Running Wild:

WASHINGTON — Rarely have so many government insiders refused to talk candidly, even on any background basis, about the civil war screeching through the $80 million-a-year federal agency created to obtain "equal employment" for minorities and women.

Despite this sensitivity over "getting involved," knowledgeable sources drop enough information to substantiate the report that the runaway, virtually autonomous Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) is rotten with mismanagement, zealotry, some bigotry, some corruption, bloc rivalries, duelling among blacks, Spanish-surnamed officials, women, Orientals and American Indians. But basically the most bitter charge is that of reverse discrimination -- blocking of advancement by whites inside the EEOC itself as well as the federal government. Especially on promotions, known as "upward mobility."

This turmoil has brought in the Oval Office itself, the FBI, the General Accounting Office (GAO), the House Equal Opportunities subcommittee chaired by California's black Congressman Gus Hawkins, and Sen. Pete Williams' Senate Labor Committee. Hawkins himself will hold hearings on "serious misconduct" by some EEOC officials and "serious management deficiencies" disclosed by audits of 32 district offices.

For years now the EEOC has been wallowing in inefficiency and overspending. One investigator reports that "the whole thing is one of the most screwed up agencies ever created in the past 10 years ... it is a source of fantastic frustration ... it has a shoe-box system of keeping records and last year the Senate Appropriations Committee and GAO had to move in because the EEOC spent a million dollars more than they actually had. This is a very serious matter."

The commission reportedly is wide open. Recently one of its own officials was arrested for attempting to sell equipment, stolen from the EEOC itself, to the camouflaged police fencing operation called Big Sting.

The commission hasn't been able to keep a chairman. There have been six in the past 10 years. Now, the distinguished black Detroiter Lowell Perry, named by President Ford himself to straighten out the weird agency, is quitting, though Perry denied this just a few weeks ago. Disgusted, he's going to Chrysler as a high-priced executive.

In the words of one prober, one of the most principled men in government, the EEOC rank and file appears determined to fight a racial war inside the government as well as in the outer world. Each minority bloc screams at the other, charging the other is either self-servingly black-oriented or Spanish-name-biased. Or anti-female. One high EEOC official actually told a conference that the second and third echelon would make policy because "chairmen come and go."

For example, the government awarded some $50 billion worth of contracts in 1974 to non-construction firms for needed services and supplies. These covered 25 million jobs. All this comes under equal employment codes. And that's just the beginning.

It's all so messed up and interwoven in rivalries that there are no uniform guidelines. Not too long ago an Equal Employment Opportunity Coordinating Council was created-- consisting of the Justice Department, Labor Department, U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, the U.S. Civil Service Commission and the EEOC-- which almost immediately began boycotting the council sessions and efforts to set up reasonable codes for employers.

These covered job application tests, the radius, by miles, within which a corporation must develop affirmative action programs and the delivery of such codes in writing for approval by some federal equal opportunity enforcement agency.

But the EEOC had other plans. It was determined to accumulate "cases." There are more than 125,000 complaints on hand now.

Some in EEOC want to stack these up and go after a "pattern of discrimination" as a prelude to class action suits. There have been two or three such massive actions costing industries many millions of dollars.

As one official put it: "Of course there are violations of the codes and theory but the day is over for mass discrimination. But some of those EEOC staff people want racial and class warfare, I believe, instead of mediation."

One cabinet-level official who recently shifted to another equally high post told me the other night that the pressures are unbearable: "Mole hills are piled up into mountains and mountains into Himalayas." Also reports are that EEOC plans to hire some 200 investigators. Why? Virtually all states have some anti-discrimination agencies. Why not turn those 200 investigators over to the Health, Education and Welfare Department to search out the chiselers so the truly needy poor, the infirm and the aged can get more of what is needed?

Soon there will be a Comptroller General's report and open congressional hearings. These should end the reign of the zealots.

Drug Administration to debate lifting of ban on cyclamates

WASHINGTON (AP) — The commissioner of the Food and Drug Administration is weighing a recommendation that would partially lift the government's 1969 ban on the sugar substitute cyclamate, restricting it to use as a tabletop sweetener.

Although Commissioner Alexander M. Schmidt has not announced his decision, an informed industry source said it is likely to go against the artificial sweetener that became the foundation of a $1 billion-a-year business before the cyclamate cancer scare.

FDA general counsel Richard A. Merrill, in an April 20 internal memo written after a meeting with representatives of Abbott Laboratories last month, said the FDA's Bureau of Foods "was recommending that cyclamate be approved only as a tabletop sweetener."

The Merrill memo, obtained under the Freedom of Information Act, added that the commissioner "had expressed concern about several statements" in the National Cancer Institute Advisory Panel's report "relating to Down's Syndrome (mongolism) chromosomal damage and other effects attributed to or associated with cyclamate in various studies."

FDA sources said this week that the commissioner's cyclamate decision might come sometime during the latter half of May, but they cautioned against speculating that cyclamate would return to the market.

Abbott Laboratories, armed with several new animal feeding studies, petitioned the FDA in November, 1973, to approve cyclamate.

A nine-month study by six scientists, assembled by the National Cancer Institute at the FDA's request, concluded last February that "the present evidence does not establish the carcinogenicity (cancer-causing potential) of cyclamate or its principal metabolite, cyclohexylamine, in experimental animals."

Benefactor sends flowers to Dunklin County prisoners

KENNETT — It's a mystery that definitely smells. Or a scented secret, if you prefer.

Prisoners at the Dunklin County jail have an anonymous benefactor, it seems; one who mailed a $50 bill to a Kennett florist last week with instructions to give the prisoners at the county jail "two goodsized beautiful bouquets."

Sheriff Raymond Scott, who is retiring this year after 20 years as the county's chief law enforcement officer, said the mysterious floral order for the prisoners is "definitely a first."

Last week, Kennett Florist Rene Robinson, owner of B & R Flowers, received a letter, postmarked in Kennett, with the following message inside, along with a crisp $50 bill.

"Enclosed is a $50 bill for flowers to be sent to the prisoners in the county jail. Please have nothing in the arrangement that a person could be destructive with, such as sharp sticks, ribbons and so forth. Do, however, have many beautiful bouquets as you can for this amount, possibly two goodsized ones, using your judgment as to the best container—preferably papier mache. Attach the following card: 'A reminder to you that—God so loved the world, and a reminder that—you are part of that world.' Send in memory of Starr Daily. If for any reason you cannot fill the order, give the money to some church of your choice."

The letter was typewritten and unsigned, with no clues as to the identity of the "Starr Daily" mentioned.

After conferring with Sheriff Scott, the baffled Mrs. Robinson and her staff prepared the first of two "good-sized" arrangements, managing to make a bouquet without any of the "sticks, ribbons and so forth" that florists usually rely on.

That arrangement — consisting of white fuchsia chrysanthemums and red carnations-was sent to the jail last Friday, and promptly placed in the hallway adjoining the prisoners' cell wing and the communications center.

"We put it here," explained the jail's trusty, motioning to the bare hallway floor, "so that the prisoners can see it when they go to make telephone calls or receive visitors."

And the prisoners' reactions?

"Well," Sheriff Scott said, "they look at it and say they'd rather have cigarettes. Anybody who's ever been in jail would have known coffee or cigarettes would be more appreciated than flowers."

Come Friday, B&R Flowers will be delivering the second $25 arrangement, but Mrs. Robinson isn't sure what she'll be sending.

Meanwhile, the floral tribute to the prisoners is drawing a variety of comments from the jail's visitors. Monday, a visitor walked through the hall, spotted the enormous bouquet, and in a lowered voice, asked quietly, "Who died?"

Man still practices law at 92

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Any man who has lived through nearly half of this nation's history, had three wives and been forced off his gold claim by the bloody Mexican Revolution of 1913 must have known some troubled times.

But Ellis Outlaw, still a practicing lawyer at 92, says he can't remember any.

"All of my times have been good," he said with a wide smile from behind the desk in his small, cluttered office. "Good times."

Born one of 13 children in a Mississippi sharecropper's family, Outlaw had to drop out of school at 11 to help support the family. Since then, he has worked, as a boot black, Pullman porter, gold miner and valet to an English Baron, among other things.

"When I was first brought to St. Louis in 1900," he said, "one of my first jobs was as a boot black on the steps of the old courthouse, the same one where the Dred Scott case was tried. I didn't know it at the time, of course, but that was also where my grandmother was sold as a slave."

Outlaw still exhibits a great deal of charm, an asset that he must have used well in obtaining jobs as valet for several prominent St. Louis men, including bank president William H. Lee, nephew of Gen. Robert E. Lee.

Later, while working as a porter on the buffet car of a train running from Chicago to Mexico City, Outlaw met and was hired by Sir Weetman D. Pearson, English baron and capitalist whose engineering firm gained fame for tunnels built under the Thames River in London and the East River in New York.

"He set me up in his oil business offices in Mexico City," Outlaw remembered, "and told me not to do anything, that whenever he traveled north he wanted me ready to go. But we never made the trip togehter."

While in Mexico, Outlaw fond time to study on his own, to marry a Mexican girl and to enter into a gold mining venture with three other men. Outlaw said that after being driven out of the mining operation by the revolution of 1913 (which Pearson's firm and other large oil companies were accused of having a hand in fomenting; he decided it was time to return to the United States for some formal education.

Divorced and remarried, this time to a Spanish girl, Outlaw entered the Chicago School of Business and worked at what he called "a gangster's cabaret" on the south side to make a living. The life proved too much for his bride.

"She spoke no English," Outlaw said. "I had to send her back to Spain.

Outlaw went on to obtain his undergraduate degree from Oskaloosa College in Iowa and then, at age 50, his law degree through a Chicago correspondence school. He passed his bar exam and settled down with the prestigious St. Louis law firm of Homer G. Phillips.

He married again, to a black woman, and struck out on his own, building up a practice which he still maintains.

"Sure, it's been an uphill struggle," Outlaw admitted as he pointed to a framed motto on his office wall. "But the Lord and these philosophies have helped me."

"You will not find contentment by never knowing an hour of ill," reads one passage. "The fire seems brightest when the wind is blowing, the night is chill. And every road of life that's worth going, lies up a hill."

Outlaw, wmo is a deacon, trustee, clerk and attorney for the Central Baptist Church, said his religion had always meant much to him, but even more since his third wife died a year ago, in their 38th year of marriage. There are days, he said, "when I'm a man lost in the woods without her."

Although they had no children, the old lawyer still has a scrapbook full of pictures of his many nephews and nieces, some of whom have followed in his footsteps.

"One of my sisters," he said, pointing to a tall, attractive woman in a faded brown picture, "had two boys and a girl. All three of them are lawyers. This one over here went on to be a doctor.

"You know," he said, his eyes red-rimmed from too much rading, "this is a great country. You better believe it is.

"I tell children today, 'Find out what you want to do and you are best adapted to do. Find out what your gift is, then pursue it with everything you have.'"

Job market for the college grad is bleak

WASHINGTON (AP) — The job market for this year's male college graduate is bleaker than it was for last year's but the picture is brighter for women expecting degrees, college placement services report.

Reports from 159 colleges and universities, compared with March 1975, show job offers over-all are down 16 per cent for bachelor's degree candidates, 25 per cent for master's candidates and 32 per cent for doctoral students, the College Placement Council said Wednesday.

"Although still on the negative side," it said, "these figures are a marked improvement over the picture in January when bachelor's volume was down 37 per cent, master's 33 per cent and doctoral 51 per cent."

The brightest spot in the survey was an increased demand for female graduates on the job market, although women represent only 16 per cent of all new job takers at the bachelor's level and 15 per cent at the master's level.

Women who plan to get a bachelor's degree have received 27 per cent more job offers in March than a year ago, while offers to men have dropped 20 per cent. At the master's level, the volume for women is up 36 per cent while for men it is down 13 per cent.

On the over-all decline in offers for March, the council, based in Bethlehem, Pa., speculated that companies may be making job offers later this year than in the past.

"There are reports from the field that the number of interviews is holding up but that employers are delaying decisions on job offers. So, it is still too early to draw conclusions," a spokesman said.

In terms of salary, bachelor's degree candidates getting job offers can expect an average $715 a month if they have humanities majors and up to $1,339 monthly for petroleum engineering. At the master's level, chemical engineering jobs paid most, up 5.3 per cent to $1,379 a month.

Job prospects are grimmest for humanities and social sciences students, down 26 per cent in volume at the bachelor's level, followed by decreases of 23 per cent in engineering, 12 per cent in the sciences and 4 per cent in business fields.

About the same number or slightly more jobs are being offered this spring by public accounting, banking, finance, insurance, service and merchandising firms, the survey found.

Job market for the college grad is bleak

WASHINGTON (AP) — The job market for this year's male college graduate is bleaker than it was for last year's but the picture is brighter for women expecting degrees, college placement services report.

Reports from 159 colleges and universities, compared with March 1975, show job offers over-all are down 16 per cent for bachelor's degree candidates, 25 per cent for master's candidates and 32 per cent for doctoral students, the College Placement Council said Wednesday.

"Although still on the negative side," it said, "these figures are a marked improvement over the picture in January when bachelor's volume was down 37 per cent, master's 33 per cent and doctoral 51 per cent."

The brightest spot in the survey was an increased demand for female graduates on the job market, although women represent only 16 per cent of all new job takers at the bachelor's level and 15 per cent at the master's level.

Women who plan to get a bachelor's degree have received 27 per cent more job offers in March than a year ago, while offers to men have dropped 20 per cent. At the master's level, the volume for women is up 36 per cent while for men it is down 13 per cent.

On the over-all decline in offers for March, the council, based in Bethlehem, Pa., speculated that companies may be making job offers later this year than in the past.

"There are reports from the field that the number of interviews is holding up but that employers are delaying decisions on job offers. So, it is still too early to draw conclusions," a spokesman said.

In terms of salary, bachelor's degree candidates getting job offers can expect an average $715 a month if they have humanities majors and up to $1,339 monthly for petroleum engineering. At the master's level, chemical engineering jobs paid most, up 5.3 per cent to $1,379 a month.

Job prospects are grimmest for humanities and social sciences students, down 26 per cent in volume at the bachelor's level, followed by decreases of 23 per cent in engineering, 12 per cent in the sciences and 4 per cent in business fields.

About the same number or slightly more jobs are being offered this spring by public accounting, banking, finance, insurance, service and merchandising firms, the survey found.

Plaques help blind identify trees

MODESTO, Calif. (AP) — Nine-year-old Robbie Freitas asked his father "What kind of tree is this?"

But Ron Freitas was unable to answer his son's question. The 42-year-old Freitas suffers from a congenital eye disease and is now almost blind.

His son's question, however, deserved an answer, so with the help of several others Freitas got 37 small metal plaques bolted to a variety of trees at the Modesto Junior College campus. Each plaque bears a brief description in braille.

Freitas said each plaque carries the tree's common name, scientific name, use, historical importance and a number.

A blind visitor or student at the campus can go to the library and request detailed sheets, also written in braille, to learn more about each tree.

Freitas said the plaques and numbered fact sheets are also in regular English for students who can see and are used by teachers for normal classroom instruction.

The placement of braille plaques to identify trees and bushes is not unique, Freitas said.

But after his son asked him to describe the tree, Freitas suggested the plaque idea to Mrs. Suzanne Breshears, a former student at the two-year community college.

She got the biological sciences and ornamental horticulture departments to compile the necessary information.

The project cost about $200 with the school supplying the funds, Freitas said.

"Children are always going along the street wondering what things are. I think we should label everything," said Freitas, who teaches blind students at an elementary school in this Central California city.

Bicentennial breakfast: star-spangled spinach?

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Bicentennial starts at the breakfast table with Patriot Peaches and Minuteman Milk, say some new Agriculture Department menus.

The menus are among three leaflets announced today by the Agriculture Department to tell school administrators and parents more about the government's school breakfast programs. Some 250,000 of the leaflets were designed and printed at the cost of about $4,700.

One of the leaflets, the most expensive, is "Bicentennial Breakfast Menus" intended to be a model for school breakfast planners for carrying out 200th anniversary themes when children eat in the morning.

Twelve themes are used in the model menus, including the American Revolutionary War breakfast which features Patriot Peaches, Sons of Liberty Loaf blueberry muffins and Minuteman Milk.

Another highlights "Famous American Women of the Revolutionary War" and includes Elizabeth Clark Cooler orange juice and Betsy Ross Crunchies in Molly Pitcher Milk.

Then there is one for Revolutionary War men with Benjamin Franklin Fruit canned peaches, George Washington Wurst sausage, Thomas Paine's Cerealized Oats oatmeal and Patrick Henry's Liberty Milk.

Other themes appeal to regional pride, including a Goldrush Menu with Westward Ho Fruit Cocktail, Pioneer's Ice Cream cornmeal mush and Covered Wagon Milk.

One called Deep South Breakfast features Confederate Nectar orange juice, Dixie Scramble scrambled eggs with cheese, Cottonballs and Sunshine grits and butter and Magnolia Juice milk.

Joseph P. McDavid, the Agriculture Department's press chief, said the leaflets are not subject to Agriculture Secretary Earl L. Butz's crackdown on paper work within the department.

Butz's office says that campaign against red tape has cut $10.9 million in paper work expenses since last fall. McDavid said the red tape program focuses on internal department reports, rather than publications for the public.

DO-IT-YOURSELF DECORATING INEXPENSIVE FAMILY FUN

Redecorating your house or apartment can be great fun, but at the same time it can put a strain on the purse strings. Fortunately, it's easy to create a beautiful home on a limited budget if you're willing to work hard. And there are lots of ways to cut expensive corners, just by doing-it-yourself! Fixing up the house may be the perfect project for the entire family. Think how proud everyone will be to know that they've contributed to the beautification of their home!

Sewing is one simple way for mother and daughter to make curtains, draperies and slip covers to give new life to a tired room. Fabrics needn't be expensive, but they should be cheerful. You may want to mix 'n match patterns and colors, or confine your handiwork to one zestful print to be used throughout the entire room. There are many magazines and booklets which provide easy instructions for making all the latest looks. And with the different types of trim available, you can give these made-at-homes a custom look at very little cost.

If you plan to buy some new furniture, be sure to shop around until you get the most for your money. Choose selectively and invest in a few good pieces rather than many inexpensive ones. When looking for tables, chairs and cabinets you'll be sure of quality if you select genuine hardwood furniture. Hardwood pieces not only look better, but they last longer and can always be repaired or refinished.

Speaking of refinishing, an old hardwood chest or table will gain new life when stripped down and restained, oiled, or painted. The men of the house can be invaluable help here in salvaging cast-offs in the family attic or purchases from the Salvation Army store. Antiquing furniture is a challenge, too, and can lead to some beautifully money-saving results.

Accessories needn't be expensive works of art to be decoratively effective. A little self-adhesive paper can turn tin cans into custom-canisters. Colored paper mats and dime-store frames make magazine pictures into hangable prints, and decorative trim can be used to spruce up an old lamp shade.

Getting ready to redecorate? Gather the family together to be inventive and imaginative and you can easily decorate inexpensively!

Silver plating ages after long storage

By Polly Cramer

Polly's Problem

DEAR POLLY — My silver set turned black while it was packed away, and I would like to clean it up, but silver polish does not help. Can you suggest something I could use to clean this up again? —MRS.G.G.W.

DEAR MRS.G.G.W. — A silver repair company told me that the base metal in plated silver often displaces the silver, when it is stored away for a long time. This is particularly true of the handles, spouts and legs to tea pots, etc. This may be what has happened to yours. There would really be little silver left to clean up. Take it to a silver plating company and ask their advice. They could tell how much silver remains on your pieces. —POLLY.

DEAR POLLY — My Pet Peeve is with a neighbor's cat. I feed the birds all winter and every time I look out that cat is going across the yard with a bird or young rabbit in his mouth. If a person has a dog it has to be kept tied up but cats are allowed to run anywhere they choose. I think people should have to keep their cats at home. —WILLIAM.

DEAR POLLY — My Pointer is for the ladies who quilt. Believe it or not, I got it from the dentist. It is to use a chair with castors on the bottom such as dentists use. I used to use a long bench, but since my son left for college I have been using his desk chair that has no arms, but has castors on the bottom. I find I can get much closer to my quilt and reach further without having to roll the unfinished area so often. This chair is quite comfortable and rolls along as I work with no getting up and down to lift a bench or chair. —G.H.

DEAR POLLY — Use a cloth or plastic shoe bag (the type that holds six pairs of shoes) to hold your various electrical cords. It can be hung in the broom closet or some out of sight place in the kitchen, where it is easily accessible. You will have no more searching around for this cord or that one. —PEGGY.

DEAR POLLY — Those round cardboards wrapped with foil that frozen pizzas come on make nice plates for round cakes you might be baking to take away from home. There is no worry about a plate being returned. —MRS.L.G.

Ann Landers

Elderly woman ashamed of her body

Dear Ann Landers: Please forgive me if I sound crude. I don't know quite how to say this but I will do my best.

I was married at 19 and shared 46 wonderful years with my husband before he died. After I'd been alone for eight years a fine widower, one year my senior, asked me to marry him.

Actually, I would love to be his wife but fear and shame are holding me back. When I look at myself unclothed before the full-length bathroom mirror, I realize my flabby, wrinkled body would not be much of a prize for any man.

What can I do or say? We are very congenial. The subject of sex has never come up. Thank you, and God bless. -- 73

Dear 73: if the gentleman was interested in a firm, young body, he probably could have found one.

I hope you will not keep him waiting another moment, say "YES" today.

The picture HE presents unclothed before a full-length bathroom mirror will not be very different from yours.

Dear Ann Landers: My husband and Mr. K have become great golf buddies. I never cared for Mr. K but his wife is even worse. We have had them to dinner and cards three times in the last six weeks and each time they become more unbearable.

They both drink too much, want to quit playing cards and dance. I'm beginning to suspect they are really after a "switchman's picnic."

I've had to take Mr. K's hands off my backside and put him in his place regularly. Mrs. K hangs all over my husband and has a way of snuggling up to him that infuriates me.

The last time they were here, I ended up fixing breakfast. (They stayed until six a.m.!) When they left I felt exhausted, insulted and used.

My husband agrees the Ks are not our type, says we don't have to entertain them any more, but last night Mrs. K called and invited us to THEIR place and he accepted! What should I do? -- Middle Muddle

Dear Mid Mud: Make it clear to your husband that the next dinner with the Odd Couple will be the last.

Tell him if he wants to play golf with Mr. K, fine and dandy, but the foursome is boresome, as well as destructive to your marriage, and you want nothing more to do with them.

Dear Ann: Our 23-year-old son told us last night that he and his sweetheart want to be married in July, in our living room.

Ella is a lovely girl. She and Don have gone together for three years. The problem: We have never met Ella's parents. Don says they are "peculiar" and will probably not come to the wedding. We feel uncomfortable about the situation and don't know what to do. Will you please enlighten us? -- Quandary In Austin

Dear Q.: Phone Ella's parents and invite them to dinner or brunch. If they decline, you will at least know you did the right thing. By all means invite them to the wedding. REGARDLESS. If they don't come, again you will be secure in the knowledge that you behaved with dignity and correctness

Girl Scout Council thanks supporters

Mrs. Joe Dye

John Hall Dalton

The Cotton Boll Girl Scout Council gave an appreciation dinner Wednesday night at the First United Methodist Church Fellowship Hall in Sikeston to honor its sustaining members. A sustaining member is one who has contributed $100 or more to the Cotton Boll Council, which serves parts of nine counties.

Mrs. Joe Dye, council president, presided at the dinner, which was attended by about 50 of the sustaining members.

Mrs. Dye and Horace Dunagan Jr., of Caruthersville, banker and finance chairman for the council, noted that this is the first time the sustaining members have been honored with a dinner.

John Hall Dalton, Kennett attorney, was guest speaker at the banquet. He gave information about deferred giving and urged sustaining members to continue their generosity to the council.

Cadette troops No. 22 and No. 79 of Sikeston, led by Mrs. John Sargent and Mrs. Norman Spitzmiller, sang for the audience. A program "Growing Up with Scouting," arranged by Beth Welborn, public relations chairman for the council, was presented. Senior scout Dawn Priday of Sikeston gave the invocation, and senior troop No. 96 of Bloomfield, led by Mrs. Joe Welborn, presented the flag ceremony.

Barbie's creator says she's too sexy

OAKLAND, Ore. (AP) — Bill Barton, who designed the original "Barbie" doll 18 years ago, says he's disappointed about the way Barbie has grown up.

"She's become a sex symbol," said Barton, who now has his own manufacturing business.

Barbie originally was "a very nicely thought-out concept for a little girl," Barton said, "a doll she could make clothes for, one with natural features and movements...."

"I really have some misgivings about what's happening today," he said. "She has just gotten too sexy."

The Barbie he designed for Mattel Inc., Barton said, "is very similar in concept to the one on the market today. The face and most features are the same — except that her features hace become exaggerated. The clothes have become oversexed."

And, said Barton, "they give her too big of a bosom, there, for the proportions of the doll."

Mattel could not be reached for comment.

Barton, who moved to Oregon from Los Angeles about a year ago, said he has some "misgivings about what's happening today," referring to "the moral implications in some of the product lines.

"I don't know if it's true, but I heard there soon will be a male doll with all the manly features. That's going beyond the realm of what's proper, I think.

"I guess I'm getting older and am becoming a prude," said the 49-year-old Barton, who lives with his family on a ranch in Oakland, a rural community in southwest Oregon.

Barton said of today's Barbie, "It has become an immoral situation where money and the selling of a product have become the most important thing."

More than 98 million dolls in the Barbie series have been reported sold, with Barbie sales accounting for most of that.

EATING WATER

LOMBARD, Ill. (AP) — Solid food provides some of us with more water than we drink from the tap, according to a Michigan State University professor.

"We think of milk as a fluid, but it contains less water than some foods we consider solid or dry," Dr. Olaf Mickelsen recently told the International Water Quality Symposium. "Milk contains 87 per cent water. But green beans, a solid, contain 89 per cent water, and lettuce, another solid, contains 95 per cent water."

Erma and the King of Siam

By ERMA BOMBECK

In an old musical called "The King and I," the king of Siam was often perplexed by life's inconsistencies. In his words, "Is a puzzlement."

Some things to me are still a puzzlement.

How come pens never have any ink in them except when you foret and put them in the washer and your entire laundry turns blue?

If the national average of children is 2.3 how come every car off the assembly line only has two back windows?

Why do they waste silicone on an ironing board?

How can an owner of a vicious dog look at his dog baring his teeth and know "he's smiling"?

Why would anyone want to get on an elevator and face the back anyway?

Why is it whenever a department store offers to pierce your ears they always put the counter on the main aisle?

Why is there a rectal thermometer in my sewing basket?

When will someone ask me to diagram a sentence like my old Freshman English teacher said they would?

How come the wheels on my shopping cart won't turn in the supermarket, but when I start to empty the grocieries from it into the car, it oils in and out of traffic in front of cars and people as if it had a motor attched to it?

How did my crock pot know the exact day the warranty ran out?

Why do I assume that those two Doves nuzzling in a tree are married? Isn't it possible they're fooling around?

Why do four out of every five Americans insist on eating in their car when everything in the car slants?

Why do I tell everyone that I'm raising my children to think for themselves ... and feel crummy when they do?

How Come the first thing I notice in a doctor's office is whether or not his plants are dead?

What possible need does a mirror serve in a bathhouse?

How come my husband always invites me out to eat on the day I go to the dentist?

How does the senior class know the exact moment my son sits down at the dinner table and place its calls accordingly?

Is a puzzlement.

FBI promoted rival gangwar

WASHINGTON (AP) — The FBI directed more than 200 Cointelpro operations against the Black Panther party and promoted a gang war between the Panthers and a rival group in which four persons were killed, a Senate report says.

Information from the FBI intelligence program also led to a 1969 raid in which Chicago police killed Fred Hampton and another Panther, the report said.

The report by the staff of the Senate intelligence committee denounced the FBI tactics as "deplorable" and added that "equally disturbing is the pride which (bureau) officials took in claiming credit for the bloodshed that occurred."

It said, "Some of the FBI's tactics against the BPP were clearly intended to foster violence, and many others could reasonably have been expected to cause violence."

In addition to promoting warfare between the Panthers and rival groups such as the Blackstone Rangers in Chicago and U.S. Inc. in Los Angeles, "the FBI employed the full range of Cointelpro techniques" in an effort to destroy the party's effectiveness, the report said.

The gang war that erupted between the Black Panthers and U.S. Inc. resulted in the shooting deaths of four party members along with several beatings in 1969. An FBI memo noted that "although no specific counterintelligence action can be credited with contributing to this situation, it is felt that a substantial amount of the unrest is directly attributable to the program."

The report said FBI tactics sometimes were used during a lull in the violence as the groups tried to work out differences peacefully.

The 38-page document is one of 13 volumes being released by the intelligence panel in support of its final report issued last week. The supplement described in detail a number of Cointelpro tactics used against the Black Panthers between 1968 and 1971.

One of the most extensive FBI letter-writing efforts was an attempt to split onetime party leaders Eldridge Cleaver and Huey Newton, it said.

A document on the 1969 Chicago police raid that resulted in the deaths of Hampton and Mark Clark claimed "the raid was based on the information furnished" by an FBI informant.

Kissinger also said the U.S. government is willing to negotiate the amassing of buffer stocks of raw materials to be used to shield producing nations from extreme price fluctuations. He said the funds to accomplish this could come from the resources bank he proposed, from government contributions or from export taxes.

American officials said this was a considerable advance toward meeting demands from the Third-World countries for stabilization of prices of the primary commodities they sell to the industrial nations.

In times of short supply, the reserves would be put on the world market to keep prices down. When there was a glut, surpluses would be bought for the stockpiles to keep prices up.

Kissinger made no mention, however, of demands from the countries exporting raw materials for a system of "indexing" to offset the effects of inflation by linking the prices of the products they sell to the prices of the manufactures they import.

The United States and other industrial nations contend such a system would result in a never-ending inflationary spiral.

The resources bank proposed by Kissinger would begin with a "guarantee fund" of $1 billion, including $200 million from the United States and substantial contributions from the 13 members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

All nations, including the Soviet Union and China, could participate, although Moscow and Peking generally shun such joint ventures. U.S. officials expect the Russians will be spurred to step up their own investment programs in the Third World.

Fulbright tells Lions of pollution problem

"Pollution is our major problem and is one which cannot be shrugged off," Dr. Arthur Fulbright told the Sikeston Lions Club Wednesday at a noon luncheon at Travelodge Restaurant.

The Rev. Dr. Fulbright's talk was based on an article he wrote for the May issue of New Age Magazine.

"We should see ecology from the perspective of God's act of creation," the Rev. Dr. Fulbright said. "Misuse of that creation is rebellion against God."

Mankind lives in a very fragile environment, he stated.

He added that people all over the world are discovering three things: That, as societies grow richer, their environments grow poorer; as the array of objects expand, the vigor of life declines; and as people acquire more leisure to enjoy their surroundings, they find less around them to enjoy.

"It is nobody's fault and it is everybody's fault," the Rev. Dr. Fulbright asserted. "The real culprits are the the three main currents of the 20th Century — population, industrialization and urbanization."

Pointing out how pollution can damage the environment, the Rev. Dr. Fulbright said that less than a tenth of one per cent of contaminating materials can kill fish life by consuming oxygen in the water, and people send 150 million tons of pollutants into the atmosphere annually — 90 per cent of which is mostly invisible, but potentially lethal gas.

"We have the skill and resources to eliminate pollution and it is a cause worth fighting for," he said.

"When the Creator entrusted mankind with the care of this planet, he expected responsible stewardship, not irresponsible pillage," the Rev. Dr. Fulbright remarked.

In a single-vehicle accident at 8:15 a.m. today on Route U, one-half mile west of Caruthersville in Pemiscot County, Rebecca Lee Cole, 22, of Bragg City was moderately injured.

The Cole woman was overtaking another vehicle, pulled back into her lane and apparently lost control of her vehicle which struck a culvert.

She also was taken to Pemiscot County Medical Center.

At 3:40 p.m. Wednesday, a three-car collision at the intersection of Highway 25 and Route 0 one and a-half miles south of Kennett resulted in minor injuries to Juanita L. Reagan, 47, of Senath, a passenger in a car driven south by Oble A. T. Reagan, 50, of Senath.

The patrol said a car driven north by Edna P. Burton, 54, of Kennett attempted a left turn into the path of Reagan's car, which struck the Burton car on the right side. The Burton car spun around in the road and struck a southbound car driven by Michael E. Dickinson, 24, of Kennett.

Mrs. Reagan was taken to Dunklin County Memorial Hospital in Kennett.

FBI promoted rival gangwar

WASHINGTON (AP) — The FBI directed more than 200 Cointelpro operations against the Black Panther party and promoted a gang war between the Panthers and a rival group in which four persons were killed, a Senate report says.

Information from the FBI intelligence program also led to a 1969 raid in which Chicago police killed Fred Hampton and another Panther, the report said.

The report by the staff of the Senate intelligence committee denounced the FBI tactics as "deplorable" and added that "equally disturbing is the pride which (bureau) officials took in claiming credit for the bloodshed that occurred."

It said, "Some of the FBI's tactics against the BPP were clearly intended to foster violence, and many others could reasonably have been expected to cause violence."

In addition to promoting warfare between the Panthers and rival groups such as the Blackstone Rangers in Chicago and U.S. Inc. in Los Angeles, "the FBI employed the full range of Cointelpro techniques" in an effort to destroy the party's effectiveness, the report said.

The gang war that erupted between the Black Panthers and U.S. Inc. resulted in the shooting deaths of four party members along with several beatings in 1969. An FBI memo noted that "although no specific counterintelligence action can be credited with contributing to this situation, it is felt that a substantial amount of the unrest is directly attributable to the program."

The report said FBI tactics sometimes were used during a lull in the violence as the groups tried to work out differences peacefully.

The 38-page document is one of 13 volumes being released by the intelligence panel in support of its final report issued last week. The supplement described in detail a number of Cointelpro tactics used against the Black Panthers between 1968 and 1971.

One of the most extensive FBI letter-writing efforts was an attempt to split onetime party leaders Eldridge Cleaver and Huey Newton, it said.

A document on the 1969 Chicago police raid that resulted in the deaths of Hampton and Mark Clark claimed "the raid was based on the information furnished" by an FBI informant.

Kissinger also said the U.S. government is willing to negotiate the amassing of buffer stocks of raw materials to be used to shield producing nations from extreme price fluctuations. He said the funds to accomplish this could come from the resources bank he proposed, from government contributions or from export taxes.

American officials said this was a considerable advance toward meeting demands from the Third-World countries for stabilization of prices of the primary commodities they sell to the industrial nations.

In times of short supply, the reserves would be put on the world market to keep prices down. When there was a glut, surpluses would be bought for the stockpiles to keep prices up.

Kissinger made no mention, however, of demands from the countries exporting raw materials for a system of "indexing" to offset the effects of inflation by linking the prices of the products they sell to the prices of the manufactures they import.

The United States and other industrial nations contend such a system would result in a never-ending inflationary spiral.

The resources bank proposed by Kissinger would begin with a "guarantee fund" of $1 billion, including $200 million from the United States and substantial contributions from the 13 members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

All nations, including the Soviet Union and China, could participate, although Moscow and Peking generally shun such joint ventures. U.S. officials expect the Russians will be spurred to step up their own investment programs in the Third World.

Fulbright tells Lions of pollution problem

"Pollution is our major problem and is one which cannot be shrugged off," Dr. Arthur Fulbright told the Sikeston Lions Club Wednesday at a noon luncheon at Travelodge Restaurant.

The Rev. Dr. Fulbright's talk was based on an article he wrote for the May issue of New Age Magazine.

"We should see ecology from the perspective of God's act of creation," the Rev. Dr. Fulbright said. "Misuse of that creation is rebellion against God."

Mankind lives in a very fragile environment, he stated.

He added that people all over the world are discovering three things: That, as societies grow richer, their environments grow poorer; as the array of objects expand, the vigor of life declines; and as people acquire more leisure to enjoy their surroundings, they find less around them to enjoy.

"It is nobody's fault and it is everybody's fault," the Rev. Dr. Fulbright asserted. "The real culprits are the the three main currents of the 20th Century — population, industrialization and urbanization."

Pointing out how pollution can damage the environment, the Rev. Dr. Fulbright said that less than a tenth of one per cent of contaminating materials can kill fish life by consuming oxygen in the water, and people send 150 million tons of pollutants into the atmosphere annually — 90 per cent of which is mostly invisible, but potentially lethal gas.

"We have the skill and resources to eliminate pollution and it is a cause worth fighting for," he said.

"When the Creator entrusted mankind with the care of this planet, he expected responsible stewardship, not irresponsible pillage," the Rev. Dr. Fulbright remarked.

Pesticide certification builds uncertainty

By SCOTT BOWLES
Missouri Press News

JEFFERSON CITY — A lot of uncertainty surrounds the Missouri plan for certification of pesticide applicators.

Uncertainty as to what the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) is going to allow and uncertainty as to how much authority the General Assembly is going to grant the state Dept. of Agriculture to comply with EPA guidelines.

The problem goes back to 1972 when a federal law was amended to require states to develop a plan for certifying farmers to apply pesticides under EPA guidelines by Oct. 21, 1976.

To facilitate this, the General Assembly passed the Missouri Pesticide Act in 1974, giving the state agriculture department the responsiblity and the power to comply with the federal rules.

However, in 1975, the EPA guidelines were changed. And as it stands right now, the Dept. of Agriculture doesn't have the authority to comply with those changes.

"We're at fault in this too," said John Wicklund, an EPA official in Kansas City said. "What was assured in '73 and '74 was changed in '75."

Basically, the federal law calls for classifying all pesticides into either restricted or general use. Only applicators who receive certification from the state will be allowed to use restricted use pesticides.

However, a discrepancy exists between the current federal rules and Missouri law on applicator classifications. The federal rules would extend certification to a greater variety of applicators.

The Missouri law, in accordance with the federal guidelines, certifies two types of applicators — commercial and private. But it doesn't certify public operators, pesticide-using government employes, and allows for a non-certified private applicator as well.

A bill amending the 1974 state law to align Missouri's standards with the federal ones would extend certification to public operators. It would also create an additional certified category of general applicator, which would only apply to someone working on land owned or rented by him or his employer.

The new EPA guidelines also require the state to inspect and investigate pesticides, applicators and equipment and enforce the rules. The Dept. of Agriculture is currently not empowered to do that.

However, the bill making these and other less significant changes in state law was killed on the legislative calendar this session.

Wicklund said despite the discrepancies in the Missouri law and the EPA guidelines — discrepancies that can't possibly be alleviated now until the next legislative session — the Missouri plan, when it's submitted, will be approved on a contingency basis.

"When a state's making a good, honest effort, we've got to take that into account," Wicklund said. "We'll stick our necks out as far as the rules and regulations go. We're going to work with the state and iron out the problems."

Wicklund says he can't foresee the General Assembly not changing the 1974 law next session. But if they don't? "Then we'd have some problems," Wicklund said.

Nevertheless, the agriculture department is in the process of drawing up a state certification plan.

"We hope to have tentative approval probably within the next couple or three months," said Tim Houser of the state department's Division of Plant Industries. "We won't have full and final approval."

But hampering the state's efforts is an uncertainty as to what the final EPA guidelines will be, especially in regard to restricted and non-restricted use pesticides. The EPA is due to reregister 34,000 pesticides into the two categories but has not yet done so.

The state, to obtain approval of its plan, could designate some pesticides for restricted use, but would have to meet pesticides for restricted use, but would have to meet minimum EPA requirements. Those requirements do not yet exist.

And though nobody's quite sure what the final state plan will be, the state, through the extension service of the University of Missouri, began preliminary certification training of commercial applicators last January.

Since individuals cannot be officially certified without an approved certification program, applicators completing the training program and passing the written test were made eligible for certification.

L.E. Anderson, who's coordinating the training program for the extension service, estimates that 60 per cent of the state's commercial applicators were reached in the 20 meetings this past winter.

The meetings were broken into a general information session and 10 specialty sessions on topics such as industrial control and fumigation.

Anderson said the commercial sessions will be repeated in eight or 10 locations, during the late fall and winter. Training for private applicators would hopefully start before the end of the year.

"Training for private applicators will be handled primarily by area agronomy specialists," Anderson said. "Hopefully, we want to start before Dec. 31."

But training and making private applicators eligible for certification brings up another sticky problem.

Missouri law prohibits forcing the private applicators to take a written test, so as part of the training program, they will be given a workbook with study questions to complete and discuss with extension service people, Anderson said.

Cronkite talks about Walters' contract

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Walter Cronkite says at first he was sickened to learn of Barbara Walters' $1 million-a-year contract with ABC-TV but now feels it is a logical and acceptable extension of the big salaries TV journalists always have been paid.

"The Barbara Walters news did shake me up at first, as it did us all, I suppose," Cronkite, anchorman of CBS-TV's network evening news, told CBS-TV affiliates at their annual meeting here Wednesday.

"There was a first wave of nausea, the sickening sensation that perhaps we were all going under, that all of our efforts to hold network television news aloof from show business had failed."

But on further reflection, Cronkite said, he decided there was no valid reason she shouldn't be paid $1 million since she is a competent journalist and TV reporters "have been getting show business salaries ... since the beginning." Cronkite, a veteran news reporter, earns several hundred thousand dollars a year.

"It is not very productive, either, to talk about whether she is worth $1 million," Cronkite said.

"Compared to what? Compared to a school teacher? Certainly not. Compared to any rock 'n roll singer? I'd say certainly yes. It is a marketplace situation. If she can get a million dollars from ABC, presumably ABC feels she is worth a million. If not, heads will roll, I assume."

And Miss Walters will be saddled with a big responsibility to deliver, much as today's high paid athletes, he said. She will become coanchor of the "ABC Evening News" after leaving NBC's "Today" show on June 4.

Cronkite said he doesn't think it is wrong for good broadcast reporters to earn higher salaries than their counterparts on newspapers because they need special skills print journalists don't, such as the ability to go on the air live without the benefit of an editor to help refine a story.

Consumers are warned about backyard pools

WASHINGTON (AP) — Consumers should be careful before they plunge into a deal for a backyard pool, the government warns.

Pools have become as common as crabgrass outside many homes, and the Federal Trade Commission says their popularity has spawned "a massive illicit market in junk merchandise at grossly exaggerated prices."

The agency issued a report on the problem Tuesday. It has not decided whether to take any other action.

Pesticide certification builds uncertainty

By SCOTT BOWLES
Missouri Press News

JEFFERSON CITY — A lot of uncertainty surrounds the Missouri plan for certification of pesticide applicators.

Uncertainty as to what the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) is going to allow and uncertainty as to how muqh authority the General Assembly is going to grant the state Dept. of Agriculture to comply with EPA guidelines.

The problem goes back to 1972 when a federal law was amended to require states to develop a plan for certifying farmers to apply pesticides under EPA guidelines by Oct. 21, 1976.

To facilitate this, the General Assembly passed the Missouri Pesticide Act in 1974, giving the state agriculture department the responsiblity and the power to comply with the federal rules.

However, in 1975, the EPA guidelines were changed. And as it stands right now, the Dept. of Agriculture doesn't have the authority to comply with those changes.

"We're at fault in this too," said John Wicklund, an EPA official in Kansas City said. "What was assured in '73 and '74 was changed in '75."

Basically, the federal law calls for classifying all pesticides into either restricted or general use. Only applicators who receive certification from the state will be allowed to use restricted use pesticides.

However, a discrepancy exists between the current federal rules and Missouri law on applicator classifications. The federal rules would extend certification to a greater variety of applicators.

The Missouri law, in accordance with the federal guidelines, certifies two types of applicators — commercial and private. But it doesn't certify public operators, pesticide-using government employes, and allows for a non-certified private applicator as well.

A bill amending the 1974 state law to align Missouri's standards with the federal ones would extend certification to public operators. It would also create an additional certified category of general applicator, which would only apply to someone working on land owned or rented by him or his employer.

The new EPA guidelines also require the state to inspect and investigate pesticides, applicators and equipment and enforce the rules. The Dept. of Agriculture is currently not empowered to do that.

However, the bill making these and other less significant changes in state law was killed on the legislative calendar this session.

Wicklund said despite the discrepancies in the Missouri law and the EPA guidelines — discrepancies that can't possibly be alleviated now until the next legislative session — the Missouri plan, when it's submitted, will be approved on a contingency basis.

"When a state's making a good, honest effort, we've got to take that into account," Wicklund said. "We'll stick our necks out as far as the rules and regulations go. We're going to work with the state and iron out the problems."

Wicklund says he can't foresee the General Assembly not changing the 1974 law next session. But if they don't? "Then we'd have some problems," Wicklund said.

Nevertheless, the agriculture department is in the process of drawing up a state certification plan.

Spirits target of $12 million lawsuit

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Lonnie Shelton filed a $12 million suit here Wednesday against the Spirits of St. Louis, two of their owners, the American Basketball Association and a Cincinnati attorney.

The suit, filed in U.S. District Court, alleges Shelton was unduly pressured into signing a $1.2 million, six-year contract with the Spirits in June 1975, after his freshman year at Oregon State.

It seeks to void the contract and asks $2 million in actual damages and $10 million in punitive damages. Named as defendants are Donald Schupak and Harry Weltman, part owners of the Spirits, and Cincinnati lawyer Ronald Grinker, who served as one of Shelton's advisors

Blues hike tix prices 10 percent

ST. LOUIS (AP) — The St. Louis Blues have announced they will raise the price of tickets an average of 10 per cent for the coming National Hockey League season.

In a letter to season ticket holders, the Blues noted it was the first increase in four years.

Single game tickets will range from $5 to $12 for non-season ticket holders and from $4.25 to $10.50 for season ticket holders. Last season prices ranged from $3.75 to $9.25.

Sikeston leads district tennis after first day

CAPE GIRARDEAU — The Sikeston Bulldogs hold a narrow lead of one half point going into Saturday's semifinals and finals of the District Tennis Tournament at the Southeast Missouri State University tennis courts.

Sikeston goes into the semifinals with 11½ team points, while Cape Central has 11, Caruthersville 8 and Poplar Bluff 7.

The Bulldogs, who entered two singles entries and two doubles teams into the District event Wednesday, have one of each still in the running for a trip to the state tournament. The top two singles players and top two doubles teams are eligible for state competition.

Sikeston's number one doubles duo, Chuck Medelberg and Chris Matthews, won three matches in a long day of activity Wednesday. They began with a victory in straight sets over Lewis and Bartmess of Kennett, 6-4, 6-4, then had an even easier time disposing of Hooks and Lawless of Cuba, 6-1, 6-1. Medelberg and Matthews lost the first set of the quarterfinal match against Will and Thomas of Farmington, 6-7, then came back to win the next two, 6-2 and 6-1, to advance to the semifinals. They will meet Vince Fallert and Adrian Toole of Cape Central at 9:00 a.m. Saturday morning. Fallert and Toole are seeded second in the tournament, but SHS coach Buddy Spears insists that his duo is capable of winning and advancing to state. "If they (Medelberg and Matthews) play like they can, they've got a good chance," Spears said.

Sikeston's other doubles team, David Potashnick and Matt Greer, made it to the quarterfinals before losing Wednesday. They had no trouble with Martin and Schott of Charleston in the opening round, 6-2, 6-0, and then beat Sinkard and LaBlont of Flat River Central 6-3, 6-2. But Rhodes and Jones of Poplar Bluff eliminated the Sikeston pair, 6-1, 6-1.

Steve Dupont advanced to Saturday's singles semifinals. Dupont knocked off Lodhelz of Desloge 6-3, 6-4 in the opening round, then had to go three sets before downing Zoellner of DeSoto 6-2, 6-7, 6-0. Dupont then made it to the semifinals with a 6-4, 6-3 win over Bohnekamp of Flat River Central in the quarterfinals. Dupont will meet the number two seed in the district, Caruthersville's Bobby Spencer, Saturday morning at 9:00.

Joel Montgomery, Sikeston's other singles entry, drew number one seeded Steve Gubin of Caruthersville and lost 6-1, 6-0 in the opening round.

Bulldogs invade Bluff for district battle vs. Mules today at 4:00

Veteran lefthander Ricky Taylor is the likely pick as starter for the Sikeston Bulldogs when they oppose Poplar Bluff in the semi-final round of the district tournament. Taylor owns five wins in a row, including a 9-1 decision earlier this month over the Mules. Poplar Bluff, needless to say, is eagerly awaiting its revenge.

Sikeston will bring a six-game winning streak into the contest, including a 10-2 first round win over Perryville last Monday. With top-seeded Cape being eliminated by Fredricktown, the second-seeded Bulldogs now loom as tournament favorites. But, the game is at Poplar Bluff and the Mules have a very good team. They own wins over tough Jackson and Cape in their 10-3 record. Sikeston is 10-4.

Game time at Whitely Park in Poplar Bluff is 4:00. The winner will oppose the Jackson-Fredricktown winner next Monday afternoon. The site will depend on the participants.

The Sikeston lineup will probably look like:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| 1ST | Dale Deal, SS | .377 JR |
| 2ND | Jeff Limbaugh, 3B | .340 JR |
| 3RD | Ricky Taylor, P | .310 SR |

| 5TH | Larry Jackson, 1B | .279 JR |
| 6TH | Bill Hampton, LF | .316 SR |

Royals release Sadecki

KANSAS CITY (AP) — Ray Sadecki, lefty reliever who has recorded 133 victories and 130 defeats in a 16-year major league career, is being given his unconditional release by the Kansas City Royals.

The Royals announced the decision Wednesday in a move to make room for Dave Nelson, designated hitter and utility infielder ho came off the 15-day disabled list.

Nelson, obtained this year from Texas, sprained a leg muscle in the second game of the year while running to first base.

The Royals said they were asking for waivers on Sadecki, 35, in order to give him his unconditional release. He was in the National League throughout his career until the Royals got him from Atlanta for the final four weeks of last season.

In three appearances, Sadecki has yielded seven hits, three walks and no unearned runs in four and two-thirds innings.

All- Stater Sammy Taylor of Lilbourn, heads for home and the congratulations of his teammates after the big sticker belted his second homerun of the game and ninth of the season against Parma Wednesday afternoon in the quarter- finals of the District 11 State Tournament. Lilbourn humiliated the Pirates in three innings 28-0.

Parma hollers 'uncle' after three innings of humiliation

LILBOURN — Sammy Taylor pitched a one hitter and slammed two homeruns to lead the LHS Panthers past the hapless Parma Pirates 28-0 here Wednesday afternoon in the first round of the District 11 Class A baseball tournament.

Parma didn't have the pitching, hitting or defense to play with the Panthers. Lilbourn took advantage of the pourous Pirate defense and wild pitching to score 10 runs in the top of the first inning. Taylor belted his first homer with none on in the frame. Lilbourn crossed the plate five times in the second inning as Taylor smacked his second homer of the game and his ninth of the season with one one.

The third inning turned into a circus as Parma used four pitchers to try to get the Panthers out. Tracy Tope belted a grandslam homerun in the inning as Lilbourn took advantage of numerous walks to score 13 more runs. Parma coach Wayne Early called an end to the proceedings after the third frame.

The Pirates only hit was a triple by Don Thatch in the bottom of the first inning.

Parma pitchers gave up 13 hits and issued 20 bases on balls in the three innings.

CAMDENTON — Some Lake of the Ozark fishermen are getting two for the price of one, but no one is likely to be very happy about it.

Larry Belusz, fisheries biologist for the Department of Conservation, says fishermen are finding an infestation of chestnut lampreys, especially on the Niangua arm of the Lake.

"They aren't any danger or threat," he says. "But there are more of them than I've ever seen and fishermen can expect to find them."

Lamprey eels are parasitic--they attach themselves to fish with their suction-cup mouth. The chestnut lamprey is common in reservoirs and large rivers in south Missouri.

They spend 4-5 years as "larvae" and then appear as parasites on fish. Belusz has found them on bass, crappie, carp and suckers so far. "It's unusual to find them on game fish," he says.

Falcone shines as Redbirds beat Atlanta Braves again, 4-0

ATLANTA (AP) — Pete Falcone may have a finishing problem, but it hasn't daunted his domination of the Atlanta Braves.

The 22-year-old St. Louis Cardinal hurler was working on a three-hitter with one down in the eighth inning Wednesday night when he suddenly was forced to leave after being struck on the left knee by a batted ball.

Relievers Mike Proly and Al Hrabosky completed the shut out as the Cards rolled to a 4-0 victory, leaving Atlanta mired in a nine-game losing string.

Falcone, who twice lost no-hit bids in late innings in Atlanta last year, took the blow from Jerry Royster. The shot caromed off Falcone's knee into short right field and Royster sprinted to second with a double.

"I didn't want to come out but the trainer said it was not worth it this early in the season, that I might get hurt," Falcone said. "So I just said 'Let's go.' "

Falcone, 1-2, said the knee didn't "hurt at all," but Cardinal officials planned postgame X-rays as a precaution.

Falcone, traded from San Francisco to the Cardinals, lost a no-hit bid against the Braves in the eighth inning one year ago today and had another no-hitter going into the seventh in a June 22 game, both of which he won for the Giants.

"I'm just good against this club," he said. "I think it's just a thing that happens. I've had some big games here, I tell ya."

The Braves trailing 3-0, got the tying run to the plate in the eighth but Hrabosky got pinch-hitter Darrell Evans on a tap to the mound to end the threat.

"To me, right there was the ball game," Hrabosky said.

All- Stater Sammy Taylor of Lilbourn, heads for home and the congratulations of his teammates after the big sticker belted his second homerun of the game and ninth of the season against Parma Wednesday afternoon in the quarter- finals of the District 11 State Tournament. Lilbourn humiliated the Pirates in three innings 28-0.

Parma hollers 'uncle' after three innings of humiliation

LILBOURN — Sammy Taylor pitched a one hitter and slammed two homeruns to lead the LHS Panthers past the hapless Parma Pirates 28-0 here Wednesday afternoon in the first round of the District 11 Class A baseball tournament.

Parma didn't have the pitching, hitting or defense to play with the Panthers. Lilbourn took advantage of the pourous Pirate defense and wild pitching to score 10 runs in the top of the first inning. Taylor belted his first homer with none on in the frame. Lilbourn crossed the plate five times in the second inning as Taylor smacked his second homer of the game and his ninth of the season with one one.

Even NBA series at 1-1

Barry scores, 44, but Suns win

OAKLAND (AP) — There was no stopping Rick Barry, but somehow the Golden State Warriors collapsed around their captain.

"It was a wasted effort. I might as well have stayed home," Barry said in disgust Wednesday night after scoring 44 points in a 108-101 playoff loss to the Phoenix Suns.

The National Basketball Association champions, who destroyed the Suns 128-103 in the opening game of the best-of-seven semifinal series, now stand 1-1 as the teams move to Phoenix, where the Suns have a 15-game homecourt winning streak.

"We have confidence that we can play with Golden State. I'm not predicting we're going to knock them out of the playoffs. They're a great team, the champs. But they're not going to beat us by 25 points again," said Paul Westphal, who led the Phoenix scoring attack with 31 points.

The Suns regrouped after the first game embarrassment and played a little slower and a lot smarter, Westphal and other players explained.

The Suns were patient on offense and usally were rewarded with good shooting opportunities.

"They were able to work the ball inside on us. That made the difference," said Warriors Coach Al Attles. "Their 'little shots' killed us."

Westphal made 14 of 19 field goal attempts, sneaking inside for many shots, and the Suns' other starting guard, Ricky Sobers, scored several of his 23 points from close range. All five Suns starters were in double figures.

Sobers, a rookie, was the team's defensive standout, virtually shutting off Golden State's All-Star guard Phil Smith.

Smith, who averaged 29.5 points in the opening series against Detroit, got off only six shots and totaled eight points in 23 minutes Wednesday night, fouling out early in the fourth period after Golden State had cut a 10-point Phoenix lead to four points.

Phoenix led most of the game despite Barry's shooting. The Warriors' captain hit on 17 of 31 field goal attempts, just as he did in game No. 1 when he scored 38 points. Jamaal Wilkes' 18 points were second high Wenesday night.

Golden State also lost its second game against Detroit, after wiping out the Pistons 127-103 in the opener.

"This is a frustrating pattern," said Wilkes.

Free agent Gilliam signs with Falcons

ATLANTA (AP) — John Gilliam said he always wanted to be an Atlanta Falcon, and he's finally getting his wish — after nine National Football League seasons.

The Falcons announced the signing Wednesday of the nine-year veteran wide receiver, who played out his option with the Minnesota Vikings last season and became a free agent May 1.

Gilliam refused to discuss financial terms but said he received a three-year contract.

"This is not a money thing," Gilliam said at a news conference in the Falcons' offices at Atlanta Stadium.

"I've got other interests here. I have always wanted to play in Atlanta. Had we not gotten together I would have gone back to Minnesota," the 6-foot-1, 185-pounder said.

Gilliam became the third free agent to sign since the players association and league owners agreed to rescind the Rozelle Rule which required a club which signed a free agent to compensate the player's former club.

Calvin Hill, who played out his option with Dallas, signed recently with Washington, and Duane Thomas signed with Dallas after playing out his option with the Redskins.

Gilliam reportedly received $75,000 last year with the Vikings..

The product of South Carolina State has lived in Atlanta the last six years and owns a shoe store here. He said negotiations with the Falcons had been going on since he obtained his free agent status.

"I love Atlanta," Gilliam said. "I want to play here. So much so, I haven't thought about playing anywhere else. I want everyone to understand this is not a case of John Gilliam coming back to rip off the Falcons for money."

In Minneapolis, Vikings General Manager Mike Lynn, praised Gilliam.

"Normally a player plays out his option for two reasons," said Lynn.

Littell gets save as Royals beat Red Sox

BOSTON (AP) — Everybody loves Fenway Park. The fans love it, and the Kansas City Royals are particularly fond of it.

"We really haven't been scoring runs until these last two nights," Kansas City manager Whitey Herzog said Wednesday night after his Royals dumped the Red Sox 8-4, sweeping a two-game series.

Amos Otis loved Fenway so much that he socked three home runs in the two games, his shot to the net above the tall left field wall tying the score for Kansas City in the fifth inning in the final game.

Veteran Cookie Rojas, who said Fenway has never been a good hitting park for him, drove in three runs Wednesday night, so something about the park must have been appealing.

However, Rojas and winning pitcher Paul Splittorff, 2-3, thought the tight Kansas City defense was the key to the victories.

"As long as I've been in the big leagues (six seasons), Kansas City has had one of the best defenses in the league," Splittorff said.

Carl Yastrzemski of the Red Sox thought the direction of Boston's hits might have helped.

"When they hit balls, they go to either side of our guys," Yaz said. "When we hit balls, they go right at them.

Whatever, the facts remain that the defending American League champions extended their losing streak to six games, the longest in two years.

MIAA to decide 1976 champions

By The Associated Press

The Missouri Intercollegiate Athletic Association will decide championships in baseball, tennis, golf and outdoor track this weekend.

Tournaments will determine champions in all but baseball, where the winner is determined by final league standings.

Three-game series involving six of the seven MIAA teams will conclude the conference baseball season.

Leading the conference with a 13-2 mark is Southeast Missouri, but Southwest has a shot at the title with a 10-3 record.

The outdoor track meet will be Friday and Saturday at the home of the defending champion, Lincoln University.

Northwest Missouri is expected to repeat as tennis champion for the sixth straight year. The tournament will be held Friday and Saturday on the school's courts in Maryville.

MIAA golfers will be at the Terre Du Lac course near Bonne Terre for the 36-hole tournament Thursday and Friday. Southwest, the defending champion, has won five of the past six tournaments.

Barry scores, 44, but Suns win

OAKLAND (AP) — There was no stopping Rick Barry, but somehow the Golden State Warriors collapsed around their captain.

"It was a wasted effort. I might as well have stayed home," Barry said in disgust Wednesday night after scoring 44 points in a 108-101 playoff loss to the Phoenix Suns.

The National Basketball Association champions, who destroyed the Suns 128-103 in the opening game of the best-of-seven semifinal series, now stand 1-1 as the teams move to Phoenix, where the Suns have a 15-game homecourt winning streak.

"We have confidence that we can play with Golden State. I'm not predicting we're going to knock them out of the playoffs. They're a great team, the champs. But they're not going to beat us by 25 points again," said Paul Westphal, who led the Phoenix scoring attack with 31 points.

The Suns regrouped after the first game embarrassment and played a little slower and a lot smarter, Westphal and other players explained.

The Suns were patient on offense and usally were rewarded with good shooting opportunities.

"They were able to work the ball inside on us. That made the difference," said Warriors Coach Al Attles. "Their 'little shots' killed us."

Westphal made 14 of 19 field goal attempts, sneaking inside for many shots, and the Suns' other starting guard, Ricky Sobers, scored several of his 23 points from close range. All five Suns starters were in double figures.

Smith, who averaged 29.5 points in the opening series against Detroit, got off only six shots and totaled eight points in 23 minutes Wednesday night, fouling out early in the fourth period after Golden State had cut a 10-point Phoenix lead to four points.

Phoenix led most of the game despite Barry's shooting. The Warriors' captain hit on 17 of 31 field goal attempts, just as he did in game No. 1 when he scored 38 points. Jamaal Wilkes' 18 points were second high Wenesday night.

Golden State also lost its second game against Detroit, after wiping out the Pistons 127-103 in the opener.

"This is a frustrating pattern," said Wilkes.

Free agent Gilliam signs with Falcons

ATLANTA (AP) — John Gilliam said he always wanted to be an Atlanta Falcon, and he's finally getting his wish — after nine National Football League seasons.

The Falcons announced the signing Wednesday of the nine-year veteran wide receiver, who played out his option with the Minnesota Vikings last season and became a free agent May 1.

Gilliam refused to discuss financial terms but said he received a three-year contract.

"This is not a money thing," Gilliam said at a news conference in the Falcons' offices at Atlanta Stadium.

"I've got other interests here. I have always wanted to play in Atlanta. Had we not gotten together I would have gone back to Minnesota," the 6-foot-1, 185-pounder said.

Gilliam became the third free agent to sign since the players association and league owners agreed to rescind the Rozelle Rule which required a club which signed a free agent to compensate the player's former club.

Calvin Hill, who played out his option with Dallas, signed recently with Washington, and Duane Thomas signed with Dallas after playing out his option with the Redskins.

Gilliam reportedly received $75,000 last year with the Vikings..

The product of South Carolina State has lived in Atlanta the last six years and owns a shoe store here. He said negotiations with the Falcons had been going on since he obtained his free agent status.

"I love Atlanta," Gilliam said. "I want to play here. So much so, I haven't thought about playing anywhere else. I want everyone to understand this is not a case of John Gilliam coming back to rip off the Falcons for money."

In Minneapolis, Vikings General Manager Mike Lynn, praised Gilliam.

"Normally a player plays out his option for two reasons," said Lynn.

Littell gets save as Royals beat Red Sox

BOSTON (AP) — Everybody loves Fenway Park. The fans love it, and the Kansas City Royals are particularly fond of it.

"We really haven't been scoring runs until these last two nights," Kansas City manager Whitey Herzog said Wednesday night after his Royals dumped the Red Sox 8-4, sweeping a two-game series.

Amos Otis loved Fenway so much that he socked three home runs in the two games, his shot to the net above the tall left field wall tying the score for Kansas City in the fifth inning in the final game.

Veteran Cookie Rojas, who said Fenway has never been a good hitting park for him, drove in three runs Wednesday night, so something about the park must have been appealing.

However, Rojas and winning pitcher Paul Splittorff, 2-3, thought the tight Kansas City defense was the key to the victories.

"As long as I've been in the big leagues (six seasons), Kansas City has had one of the best defenses in the league," Splittorff said.

"When they hit balls, they go to either side of our guys," Yaz said. "When we hit balls, they go right at them.

Whatever, the facts remain that the defending American League champions extended their losing streak to six games, the longest in two years.

MIAA to decide 1976 champions

By The Associated Press

The Missouri Intercollegiate Athletic Association will decide championships in baseball, tennis, golf and outdoor track this weekend.

Tournaments will determine champions in all but baseball, where the winner is determined by final league standings.

Three-game series involving six of the seven MIAA teams will conclude the conference baseball season.

Leading the conference with a 13-2 mark is Southeast Missouri, but Southwest has a shot at the title with a 10-3 record.

The outdoor track meet will be Friday and Saturday at the home of the defending champion, Lincoln University.

Northwest Missouri is expected to repeat as tennis champion for the sixth straight year. The tournament will be held Friday and Saturday on the school's courts in Maryville.

MIAA golfers will be at the Terre Du Lac course near Bonne Terre for the 36-hole tournament Thursday and Friday. Southwest, the defending champion, has won five of the past six tournaments.

Tavern sued successfully for bar patron's actions

By W. ROBERT WELLER
Asociated Press Writer

And now, the Beverly Hills bar that served Gordon has been sued successfully for more than $2 million under a state law that makes taverns liable for the actions of their patrons.

Bartenders around the country contacted by The Associated Press said such rulings are unfair, and are easily exploited by the unscrupulous. They add they always try to cut off the patron who has had too much, although admitting they sometimes aren't too successful.

"We'll have to be more careful," said bartender Clem Abbott of the Pasadena, Calif., Elks Club. "They've prosecuted bartenders before for that — fined them for giving a man too much to drink. But with that kind of money, houses will begin cracking down on their policy."

Drawing attention to so-called "Dram Shop Laws" was a jury's verdict in the Stacy case Tuesday. The Los Angeles court awarded Stacy $1.9 million and Mrs. Cox's estate $400,000. Mrs. Cox was a passenger on Stacy's motorcycle when it was rammed in 1973 by Gordon's auto.

Stacy also won a $175,000 settlement from Los Angeles on his claim that the road where the accident occurred was poorly maintained.

Lawyers for the Chopping Block Bar, where Gordon had been drinking, said Wednesday they will appeal and may ask a reduction in the award.

Norman Manha, Western director of the National License Beverage Association (NLBA), says this decision is the eighth or ninth major damage award won against a California tavern in recent years.

Herb Haywood, who has operated the Centralia House in Centralia, Ill., for the past seven years, said he was once sued by a lawyer who wasn't sure where the offender had been drinking so he used a "scattergun approach" and sued Haywood's place on the chance the fellow had been there. He hadn't.

Kennett man held in stabbing

WEST MEMPHIS, Ark. (AP) — Bond was set at $30,000 Wednesday for Stanley Goodrich, 19, of Kennett, Mo., who is charged in the stabbing death of a Blue Springs, Mo., businessman.

Goodrich remained in the Crittenden County jail at Marion.

Deputies said the body of Joe Bob Hollingsworth, 40, was found Sunday in a road-side ditch about 15 miles west of here.

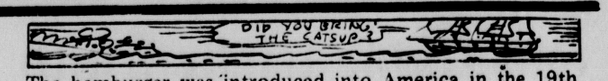
Goodrich was charged with arson after the car was found and later was questioned by authorities in Hollingsworth's death. He was arrested on murder charges Sunday, deputies said.

Authorities said it was believed that Hollingsworth picked up Goodrich who had been hitchhiking near Batesville, Miss., on April 24.

Goodrich's case is expected to come up in the September term of Crittenden County Circuit court.



The hamburger was introduced into America in the 19th century by sailors from Hamburg, Germany.

Criminals steal 2 million from government computers

WASHINGTON (AP) — Criminals have manipulated government computers to steal about $2 million in 69 known cases, but the over-all loss could be much higher, congressional auditors say.

"A wide variety of computer-released crimes in all levels of government has been discovered," the General Accounting Office concluded in a recent report.

The GAO said the frauds were possible because of lax controls over the computer systems maintained by numerous government agencies.

In its investigation, the congressional audit agency obtained information on 69 computer crime cases from nine major government departments.

In one case, the report said, a government employe entered fake payment vouchers into a computer system.

"The computer could not recognize that the transactions were fraudulent and issued checks payable to fictitious companies set up by the employe and his accomplices," the auditors wrote.

The checks were sent to banks where the conspirators had opened accounts for the fictitious firms. "The criminals then withdrew the funds from the accounts," the report continued.

This scheme cost he government $100,000, the auditors said.

About 62 per cent of the government computer crimes involved such relatively simple operations, contrary to the widespread belief that computer crime requires sophisticated technological expertise, the report observed.

In other cases, the report said some employes have illegally used government computers for their own purposes. This has cost the government several thousand dollars in computer time, the report said.

The auditors said that on the basis of the 69 known cases, the government loses less in the average computer crime than private industry. The average government loss in each case was $44,000, while a Stanford Research Institute report in 1963 estimated the average loss in computer crimes in private industry was $450,000.

The report said many of the 69 government cases have resulted in criminal convictions, but gave no precise figures.

The auditors recommended that government agencies develop tighter controls and auditing procedures to ensure that only authorized employes operate computers. The report said computer operations should be separated in ways which would reduce an employe's opportunity to carry out fraud schemes.

Military interest declines

WASHINGTON (AP) — The upturn in the nation's economy is giving young men a better shot at the job market and their interest in the all-volunteer military service is on the decline, according to a new survey conducted for the Army.

Maj. Gen. Eugene P. Forrester, the Army's top recruiter, says the survey "indicates a new surge in confidence in civilian job prospects and in young people's economic futures coupled with a declining interest in military service."

By and large, the services have been able to meet their enlistment quotas since the recessin took hold in 1974.

But results of the survey, disclosed at an Army conference this week, spells bad news for the Pentagon's hopes of maintaining an all-volunteer military force if the economy booms.

The survey tends to support the recent warning by the Defense Manpower Commission, which said that if a robust economy develops, the supply of recruits will probably not be large enough to support needs of the service."

Quoting from the survey, Forrester said he found that interest in the Army among young men "is sharply down when compared with comments made even as recent as six months ago.

"Many young men do not feel the Army or any of the services is a viable alternative to a civilian job," the survey said.

"They feel the Army has tightened up its requirements for enlisting, but that it is for fellows who 'can't cut it' in the civilian world."

There was no indication of how large a sample was taken by the private firm that conducted the survey for the Army.

Writers asks CIA for names

ST. LOUIS (AP) — The Central Intelligence Agency should release the names of journalists who are or have been employed by the agency, the executive board of the National Conference of Editorial Writers said Wednesday.

The conference urged immediate termination of clandestine CIA employment of journalists and opposed planting of false stories in a statement released here by conference president John J. Zakarian of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

The statement was adopted over the weekend, Zakarian said. The conference has some 400 members in the United States and Canada.

Tavern sued successfully for bar patron's actions

By W. ROBERT WELLER
Asociated Press Writer

A Beverly Hills bar poured the shot that may be heard round the nation.

And now, the Beverly Hills bar that served Gordon has been sued successfully for more than $2 million under a state law that makes taverns liable for the actions of their patrons.

Bartenders around the country contacted by The Associated Press said such rulings are unfair, and are easily exploited by the unscrupulous. They add they always try to cut off the patron who has had too much, although admitting they sometimes aren't too successful.

"We'll have to be more careful," said bartender Clem Abbott of the Pasadena, Calif., Elks Club. "They've prosecuted bartenders before for that — fined them for giving a man too much to drink. But with that kind of money, houses will begin cracking down on their policy."

Drawing attention to so-called "Dram Shop Laws" was a jury's verdict in the Stacy case Tuesday. The Los Angeles court awarded Stacy $1.9 million and Mrs. Cox's estate $400,000. Mrs. Cox was a passenger on Stacy's motorcycle when it was rammed in 1973 by Gordon's auto.

Stacy also won a $175,000 settlement from Los Angeles on his claim that the road where the accident occurred was poorly maintained.

Lawyers for the Chopping Block Bar, where Gordon had been drinking, said Wednesday they will appeal and may ask a reduction in the award.

Norman Manha, Western director of the National License Beverage Association (NLBA), says this decision is the eighth or ninth major damage award won against a California tavern in recent years.

Herb Haywood, who has operated the Centralia House in Centralia, Ill., for the past seven years, said he was once sued by a lawyer who wasn't sure where the offender had been drinking so he used a "scattergun approach" and sued Haywood's place on the chance the fellow had been there. He hadn't.

Kennett man held in stabbing

WEST MEMPHIS, Ark. (AP) — Bond was set at $30,000 Wednesday for Stanley Goodrich, 19, of Kennett, Mo., who is charged in the stabbing death of a Blue Springs, Mo., businessman.

Goodrich remained in the Crittenden County jail at Marion.

Deputies said the body of Joe Bob Hollingsworth, 40, was found Sunday in a road-side ditch about 15 miles west of here.

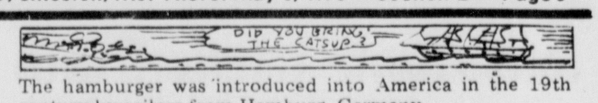
Goodrich was charged with arson after the car was found and later was questioned by authorities in Hollingsworth's death. He was arrested on murder charges Sunday, deputies said.

Authorities said it was believed that Hollingsworth picked up Goodrich who had been hitchhiking near Batesville, Miss., on April 24.

Goodrich's case is expected to come up in the September term of Crittenden County Circuit court.



The hamburger was introduced into America in the 19th century by sailors from Hamburg, Germany.

Old flame tricked into reunion with admiral

ORANGE PARK, Fla. (AP) — "It was a very beautifsl visit," says a retired Navy admiral who was tricked into a reunion with the Russian actress who was his wartime lover 30 years ago.

"I didn't know what to say for the first fve minutes," Adm. Jackson R. Tate said Wednesday night. "The entire thing was a complete surprise to me and my wife."

Despite the surprise, Tate said he and his wife, Hazel, enjoyed the two-hour visit with Zoya Fyodorova at their home on April 27.

Tate's love affair during World War II with Miss Fyodorova angered Soviet officials and the actress was put sent to prison for 8½ months. Tate, who was a naval attache in Moscow at the time, was expelled from the country.

It wasn't until many years later that Tate learned about their love child, Victoria. She came to the United States in March 1975 to meet her father for the first time, and, last June, she married airline pilot Frederick Pouy of Stamford, Conn.

Victoria's mother came to Stamford from the Soviet Union on April 23 to be with her daughter for the birth of the Pouys' child, an eight-pound son delivered Monday at a Greenwich, Conn., hospital.

The premature reunion between Miss Fyodorova and Tate was disclosed Tuesday by Pouy, who gave few details.

Pouy said that a reporter for a newspaper he declined to name told Miss Fyodorova that Tate was very ill and wanted to see her. The reporter had two airline tickets ready and flew her to Florida.

Tate said that Henry Gris, an editor for the National Enquirer who engineered Victoria's exit from the Soviet Union, set up the meeting with "a smart trick."

"He called me and asked for appointment," Tate said in a telephone interview. "He asked me if he could meet me here at my house."

When Gris arrived, he had Miss Fyodorova with him. "She said the editor had tricked her," Tate said.

Gris could not be reached for comment, but Enquirer spokesman John Bell said the weekly newspaper based in Lantana, Fla., set up the meeting.

"I would have thought it was reasonable for a woman who hadn't seen the father of her child for nearly 30 years to see him when she comes to America," Bell said. "Whether it (the meeting) was engineered is debatable. I think she wanted to see him."

Tate declined to say exactly what he and Miss Fyodorova discussed.

Woman asks high court to help keep family together

CLEVELAND (AP) — The way Inez J. Moore sees it, the family that stays together may need a lawyer to do so — and she's taking the issue all the way to the U.S. Supreme Court.

The 62-year-old widow, a slight woman whose hands are twisted by arthritis, took on City Hall in suburban East Cleveland three years ago in an effort to keep her grandson, John Moore Jr., 9, who she claims is part of her family.

"I looked in Webster's for a definition of a family," the gray-haired Mrs. Moore said in an interview. "It isn't anything like the definition the city gives you."

At issue is a section of East Cleveland's city code adopted in 1966 which defines a family as possibly one person but limits membership to "not more than one dependent married or unmarried child of the nominal head of the household ... and dependent children of such dependent child."

"I have had John Jr. ever since his mother died," said Mrs. Moore. "I imagine he was almost a year old. I told my son I would help him raise the boy and I have had him in my home ever since."

She said that when another son, Dale, was divorced, she agreed to help raise his son, Dale Jr., too.

The arrangement violates East Cleveland's definition of family, and the courts — so far — have upheld that ordinance, which would require Mrs. Moore to find another home for John Jr.

"A single person is not a family," Mrs. Moore said, her voice quavering with emotion. "A couple is not a family. There is no family until there are children....

"This whole house is a family. That was my purpose when I bought it ... so I would be sure my children and grandchildren would have a place to live."

Bond may sign bill on county payments

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. (AP) — A measure ending the requirement that counties must pay for thier poor persons who receive treatment at state mental hospitals is among the seven bills Gov. Christopher S. Bond is scheduled to sign into law today.

The measures are among those given final approval by the Missouri Legislature during its four-month session which ended last Friday.

Another proposal to require local governments to hold public hearings on planned tax rates will also be approved during two separate bill-signing ceremonies.

The Missouri Association of Counties had sought passage of the bill calling on the state to pay for indigent persons receiving care at state mental facilities.

Present law requires that the counties in which the poor people live are billed for the cost of care to the individual. Although the counties are relieved of future obligations to pay for the care, those who still owe the state for past treatment of indigents shall continue to pay the charges assessed against them.

The bill calling for the public hearings on tax levies has been referred to as the "open window" bill, and it would go into effect after Dec. 31.

Another bill gives persons between 18 and 21 the authprity to serve intoxicating beverages while working as waiters and waitresses in establishments which receive at least 50 per cent of their profits from the sale of food. But the bill still includes the prohibition against those under 21 selling or mixing intoxicating drinks.

Police officers in St. Louis County and the city of St. Joseph would be given the authority to make an arrest on the belief that the suspect committed a misdemeanor under antoher bill.

The other bills for signing on the governor's desk would extend the life of the St. Louis Metropolitan Airport Authority to Dec. 31, 1978, change the definition of dentistry and podiatry and adjust the Public Service Commission's authority over railroads.

Drugs aid cancer treatment

WASHINGTON (AP) — Powerful anticancer drugs used together significantly prolong survival of some patients with advanced stomach cancer — a fatal condition virtually untreatable in the past, Georgetown University scientists announced today.

The scientists said about half of 21 advanced stomach cancer patients in a study responded to the treatment, with some of the patients so far living more than three times longer than with conventional therapy.

"The big thing to emphasize is that with gastric (stomach) cancer, there really haven't been other treatment results indicating this prolonged survival," Dr. John Macdonald said in an interview.

"This indicates there is now a 50 per cent chance that gastric cancer cases can respond to the program and for those who do, there could be a relatively long survival with improved quality of life compared to present statistics," he said.

Macdonald and Drs. Philip S. Schein, Winston Ueno and Paul Woolley presented the results of their study in Toronto, Canada, at a meeting of the American Society of Clinical Oncology.

With the best previous drug treatment for stomach cancer, "the average survival time was only five and one half months for 50 per cent of the patients," Macdonald said. "There was almost no difference between this and the average survival time of similar cases if untreated — for 50 per cent of those the average survival was 3-4 months."

In the study, 10 of 21 patients responded to the new treatment. Two of the 10 died after surviving more than 10 months after treatment.

Woman asks high court to help keep family together

CLEVELAND (AP) — The way Inez J. Moore sees it, the family that stays together may need a lawyer to do so — and she's taking the issue all the way to the U.S. Supreme Court.

The 62-year-old widow, a slight woman whose hands are twisted by arthritis, took on City Hall in suburban East Cleveland three years ago in an effort to keep her grandson, John Moore Jr., 9, who she claims is part of her family.

"I looked in Webster's for a definition of a family," the gray-haired Mrs. Moore said in an interview. "It isn't anything like the definition the city gives you."

At issue is a section of East Cleveland's city code adopted in 1966 which defines a family as possibly one person but limits its membership to "not more than one dependent married or unmarried child of the nominal head of the household ... and dependent children of such dependent child."

"I have had John Jr. ever since his mother died," said Mrs. Moore. "I imagine he was almost a year old. I told my son I would help him raise the boy and I have had him in my home ever since."

She said that when another son, Dale, was divorced, she agreed to help raise his son, Dale Jr., too.

The arrangement violates East Cleveland's definition of family, and the courts — so far — have upheld that ordinance, which would require Mrs. Moore to find another home for John Jr.

"A single person is not a family," Mrs. Moore said, her voice quavering with emotion. "A couple is not a family. There is no family until there are children....

"This whole house is a family. That was my purpose when I bought it ... so I would be sure my children and grandchildren would have a place to live."

Bond may sign bill on county payments

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. (AP) — A measure ending the requirement that counties must pay for thier poor persons who receive treatment at state mental hospitals is among the seven bills Gov. Christopher S. Bond is scheduled to sign into law today.

The measures are among those given final approval by the Missouri Legislature during its four-month session which ended last Friday.

Another proposal to require local governments to hold public hearings on planned tax rates will also be approved during two separate bill-signing ceremonies.

The Missouri Association of Counties had sought passage of the bill calling on the state to pay for indigent persons receiving care at state mental facilities.

Present law requires that the counties in which the poor people live are billed for the cost of care to the individual. Although the counties are relieved of future obligations to pay for the care, those who still owe the state for past treatment of indigents shall continue to pay the charges assessed against them.

The bill calling for the public hearings on tax levies has been referred to as the "open window" bill, and it would go into effect after Dec. 31.

Another bill gives persons between 18 and 21 the authprity to serve intoxicating beverages while working as waiters and waitresses in establishments which receive at least 50 per cent of their profits from the sale of food. But the bill still includes the prohibition against those under 21 selling or mixing intoxicating drinks.

Police officers in St. Louis County and the city of St. Joseph would be given the authority to make an arrest on the belief that the suspect committed a misdemeanor under antoher bill.

The other bills for signing on the governor's desk would extend the life of the St. Louis Metropolitan Airport Authority to Dec. 31, 1978, change the definition of dentistry and podiatry and adjust the Public Service Commission's authority over railroads.

Drugs aid cancer treatment

WASHINGTON (AP) — Powerful anticancer drugs used together significantly prolong survival of some patients with advanced stomach cancer — a fatal condition virtually untreatable in the past, Georgetown University scientists announced today.

The scientists said about half of 21 advanced stomach cancer patients in a study responded to the treatment, with some of the patients so far living more than three times longer than with conventional therapy.

"The big thing to emphasize is that with gastric (stomach) cancer, there really haven't been other treatment results indicating this prolonged survival," Dr. John Macdonald said in an interview.

"This indicates there is now a 50 per cent chance that gastric cancer cases can respond to the program and for those who do, there could be a relatively long survival with improved quality of life compared to present statistics," he said.

Macdonald and Drs. Philip S. Schein, Winston Ueno and Paul Woolley presented the results of their study in Toronto, Canada, at a meeting of the American Society of Clinical Oncology.

With the best previous drug treatment for stomach cancer, "the average survival time was only five and one half months for 50 per cent of the patients," Macdonald said. "There was almost no difference between this and the average survival time of similar cases if untreated — for 50 per cent of those the average survival was 3-4 months."

In the study, 10 of 21 patients responded to the new treatment. Two of the 10 died after surviving more than 10 months after treatment.

New cop show gunned down

Sorvina pronounces Superstar DOA

By Dick Kleiner

SAN FRANCISCO — (NEA) — I visited San Francisco, and the company making the series, Bert D'Angelo-Superstar, just before the show was dropped by ABC.

At the time, they were unaware of the cancellation. But they weren't very optimistic. The ratings weren't very good, the network wasn't spending a dime on publicity or promotion, everything pointed toward the inevitable.

Still, the cast and crew were clinging to the last traces of hope, clutching at straws. And some of the straws seemed reasonably substantial — the show's reviews had been good, particularly for the star, Paul Sorvino, and the ratings had shown a consistency, indicating that those who watched the show liked it and tuned in every week.

They were shooting on the San Francisco docks. A stuntman, Chuck Hicks, was doubling for Sorvino, doing a stunt which involved running along the dock, jumping onto crates and then grabbing a huge crate as it was hoisted aboard a freighter.

Hicks was, of course, dressed in the identical clothes Sorvino was wearing and was built along the same lavish lines. The rest of the cast was kidding Sorvino about why he wasn't doing the stunt himself.

"I'm in good shape," Sorvino said. "But not that good."

Sorvino was bitter about the treatment the show had gotten, but it didn't affect his acting or his behavior on the set. It wasn't until you asked him about the show that you touched a nerve and it all poured out.

He said he was very depressed over what had been happening to the show. It started with the first episode. Bert D'Angelo-Superstar was a spinoff from the long-running ABC hit, The Streets of San Francisco. They introduced Sorvino as D'Angelo on that show, bringing the character out from New York and installing him in San Francisco.

But, for some dumb reason, ABC first scheduled that spinoff and then rescheduled it.

HAPPIER DAYS found Paul Sorvino delighted doing his own series, before he became convinced ABC was abandoning the show to cancellation.

The result was that it never did air until after the new show premiered in its own time slot. So the character was never properly introduced.

"I've had no explanation from the network as to why they did that," Sorvino says, "other than they said they thought it was a good idea. What good idea? We were all set up for a big bow and then they did that.

"It's like Ali going against Liston when he was 18. No way. They wouldn't let him, not until he was ready. They let us get in the ring before we were ready."

When a show isn't going well, there is always talk about extraneous things. Many of the people blamed the title of the show, which really was misleading. But Sorvino wouldn't go the route of that cop-out. He wasn't about to blame the title.

"Nobody likes the title," he says, "but if the show was a hit, the title wouldn't matter. Call it 'Roaches On the Bannister' and, if it's a hit, everybody would say, 'Where did you ever get such a great title?' If it's a hit, it doesn't matter what you call it. If it's a flop, the title doesn't matter, either."

The tragedy of the show's demise is that it has soured Sorvino on episodic TV for the foreseeable future. And that's a pity, because he is one of our most ingratiating actors. He made Bert D'Angelo an interesting human being, far from the cut-and-dry formula heroes of the average TV series.

In chopping down Superstar (and Harry O, David Janssen's series), ABC eliminated the only two shows it had with any style, any class. Janssen, a TV veteran, probably will be back. Sorvino could come back, too — he says he's had a lot of other series offers — but he doubts he will.

"You can't say 'never,'" Sorvino says, "but the way I feel right now I'll never do another series. This one was a quality show. I think it was the best show on TV.

"I've worked hard to make this good. Once I worked a 16-hour day. And the way I feel, if this doesn't work, then nothing will."

He believes both he and the show got a raw deal from the network. He doesn't blame the show's packager, Quinn Martin. He says Martin stuck with it all along, didn't stint, spent money as he should. But he believes the network — ABC — loused up the spin-off situation, never promoted or publicized it properly, and gave it the worst time slot possible.

"I have to think," Sorvino says, "they've either already decided to pick it up or else they've already decided to cancel us — probably the latter."

As events turned out, he was right. It was cancelled. Sorvino won't suffer; he's already set to do a play in St. Louis this summer and he can probably do movies or whatever he wants. He's too good an actor not to work regularly.

Paul Sorvino is a Brooklyn-born man whose Eastern roots are so strong he still lives in New Jersey. He says his family ties are all there, and that's where he wants to stay. The work is here, but he lives there.

His father was — and is — in New York's garment trades. At 74, Paul's father still goes to work every day for a robe manufacturer, designing and cutting garments.

"I wanted to be an actor since I was four," he says. "But there were plenty of detours along the way. I waited tables, I tended bar."

He went into advertising and was fairly successful, and was the vice-president of a small agency, specializing in copy writing. But, despite the fact that he was making pretty good money, he wanted to act and he quit and his wife, Lorraine, supported him until he began earning his keep as an actor.

"She was very supportive of my efforts," he says.

He was on and off-Broadway, in movies, and now in television. He'll always work, but the spectre of Superstar's failure haunted him, even before it happened.

"If it fails," he says, "I'll have no regrets. I worked hard and I think the show was a very good one. What else could I do?"

In Boston on June 16, 1775, British Gen. Gage issued a proclamation offering a pardon "in the King's name, to all, except Samuel Adams and John Hancock, who will lay down their arms." Colonists were warned that "those who do not accept this pardon will be regarded as rebels and traitors." Three days later, June 19, the Massachusetts Provincial Congress, in reply to Gen. Gage's offer, declared that all those who "shall aid the British are enemies and traitors to their country," The World Almanac notes.

Atrocity of ignoring foreign atrocities

By Ray Cromley

WASHINGTON — (NEA) — As a nation we periodically become deeply concerned with the fate of a nation — Angola, South Vietnam or Korea.

Yet, except on occasion, we seem insensitive to the fate of individuals politically persecuted in one country or another.

For one Alexander Solzhenitsyn, the writer whose cause we pursue, we ignore a thousand others.

We read of prominent scientists and writers sent to insane asylums and kept drugged for years on end. And we cluck in distaste, then turn back to the comics.

Whole populations are moved in China and we yawn.

Tens of thousands of peaceful protesters and opposition political leaders are jailed without trial by India's Indira Gandhi and we barely turn away from the late movie.

We skim over reports of the fate of critics of the regime in North and South Korea, in South Vietnam, Chile and Argentina. We barely notice similar happenings in Uganda.

On occasion, a prestigious group of scientists, writers, psychologists passes a resolution in defense of human rights, carefully worded so as to create no offense. After some publicity, the matter is discretely allowed to die. There is no political advantages in concern over individual suffering.

The members of the National Academy of Sciences, composed of some of our most prominent theoreticians, is agonizing over this problem currently, and thus far getting nowhere. There is agreement only on a bland statement of the type mentioned above.

Now it must be said in all fairness that there is no easy solution to this problem. Every nation is jealous of their national sovereignty and each takes an extremely dim view of any criticism of its internal actions.

The U.S. government does little. Though some of its agencies collect information on the repression of individuals and groups within most countries, that information, for the most part, lies hidden in the files of the State Department and intelligence. Sometimes pro forma protests are made in international organizations; there is usually little follow through.

There's apparently no attempt by Washington at a cover up — but little attempt either, to let Americans know the suffering of those men and women in foreign countries whose only sin has been to express openly, or privately, their personal convictions on freedom and the state of affairs in their own countries.

Yet as Philip Handler, President of the National Academy of Sciences, has said, the fabric of human rights "is a single tissue, a web that cannot be rent anywhere without being damaged everywhere. It cannot safely be torn in some corner of the globe . . . without damaging each of us . . ."

I suggest that if Western Europe is worth defending against Hitler, and Eastern Asia against Tojo, that those courageous individuals who suffer inhumane persecution because of their simple desire for freedom of speech, have some claim on us, not on our troops or economic sanctions necessarily. But certainly a thoroughly-documented detailed exposure of each atrocity with a regular follow through on the progress of the case, could have some effect.

I do not here refer to blanket charges, which too frequently degenerate into easily ignored propaganda, but rather to individual factual dossiers of each incident.

Postal service cuts could hurt small towns

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Postal Service is considering cost-cutting actions that would irreparably damage many small towns, 14 members of Congress say.

One senator and 13 House members appeared at a hearing of a House Post Office subcommittee Tuesday to criticize the Postal Service's decision to consider shutting down some rural post offices that operate at a deficit.

Sixteen other House members are scheduled to present their criticisms of the Postal Service today.

"Instead of reducing the federal presence in small town America, we should be taking steps to better these communities and the quality of life there."

Rep. Don Fuqua, D-Fla., said, "The Postal Service must consider factors other than the dollar."

The Postal Service is considering closing more than 1,300 small post offices. Some Congress members expressed the fear that figure represents only the beginning. About 18,000 of the nation's 30,000 post offices are located in rural communities.

Postmaster General Benjamin F. Bailar has said the Postal Service needs to cut costs wherever possible because of its financial crisis. The mail agency's deficit is expected to amount to about $4 million per day during the fiscal year that ends next month.

I suggest that if Western Europe is worth defending against Hitler, and Eastern Asia against Tojo, that those courageous individuals who suffer inhumane persecution because of their simple desire for freedom of speech, have some claim on us, not on our troops or economic sanctions necessarily. But certainly a thoroughly-documented detailed exposure of each atrocity with a regular follow through on the progress of each case, could have some effect.

I do not here refer to blanket charges, which too frequently degenerate into easily ignored propaganda, but rather to individual factual dossiers of each incident.

Postal service cuts could hurt small towns

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Postal Service is considering cost-cutting actions that would irreparably damage many small towns, 14 members of Congress say.

One senator and 13 House members appeared at a hearing of a House Post Office subcommittee Tuesday to criticize the Postal Service's decision to consider shutting down some rural post offices that operate at a deficit.

Sixteen other House members are scheduled to present their criticisms of the Postal Service today.

"Instead of reducing the federal presence in small town America, we should be taking steps to better these communities and the quality of life there."

Rep. Don Fuqua, D-Fla., said, "The Postal Service must consider factors other than the dollar."

The Postal Service is considering closing more than 1,300 small post offices. Some Congress members expressed the fear that figure represents only the beginning. About 18,000 of the nation's 30,000 post offices are located in rural communities.

Postmaster General Benjamin F. Bailar has said the Postal Service needs to cut costs wherever possible because of its financial crisis. The mail agency's deficit is expected to amount to about $4 million per day during the fiscal year that ends next month.

Predicts best tour season

By TONY ROBERTS
Of The Springfield Daily News
For The Associated Press

The cooperation of Mother Nature, politics and the economy is leading southwest Missouri businessmen to plan on their best tourist season ever this summer.

Reservation books at motels and resorts are filling at a record pace, and restaurants, shopping centers and recreation areas are springing up around nearly all Ozarks lakes.

"Looks like it's going to be a dandy. Attendance at sport shows is up, mail inquiries are running 30 per cent ahead of last year and the motels' advance reservations are up," said Jim Stokes, executive manager of the Branson-Lakes Area Chamber of Commerce.

He estimated a 10 per cent increase over last year at the Table Rock, Taneycomo and Bull Shoals areas.

"People are a whole lot different this year," said Bob Matyska, president of the Twin Bay Area Association on Bull Shoals Lake. "Their whole outlook has changed. They seem to be on the upswing. I just wish I had more cottages to rent.

Tom Schultz, executive director of the Lake of the Ozarks Associaton, attributed the good outlook for his area to the bicentennial, the easing of the recession and the election year.

"And the warm weather early kind of helped them get in the spirit early," Schultz said.

Morris Bird, president of the Lake Stockton Association, said additional effort by area businessmen and early spring-like weather were expected to reverse the one per cent decline in attendance last year and make it "one of the better years we've had, if not the best."

Pomme de Terre Lake, which had a 31 per cent increase in attendance last year, is looking for another jump of 26 per cent.

"Everybody you talk to says things are looking up," said Bob Thomas, president of the Pomme de Terre League. "Being a election year, things are pretty stable. They have fears about what will happen next year, so they are taking their vacations now."

Pulse reflects beating heart

By Lawrence E. Lamb, M.D.

DEAR DR. LAMB — What causes the heart to hesitate and then come through with a heavy beat? It is more noticeable after a meal but does happen at almost any time. I am 73 and in fairly good health other than some arthritis.

DEAR READER — The heart beats at a steady, rhythmic rate even though the rate may gradually slow or increase. Sometimes the heart will receive electrical stimulation early. This will cause the heart muscle to contract early.

The pulse which you feel is a result of how much blood is pumped out of the heart with each beat. The heart is also a volume organ and stores blood between each beat. If the heart beats early, it will not have had much time to fill with blood. Because of this the early beat doesn't cause much of a pulse wave and you literally don't feel the beat. The early beat then replaces the rhythmic one.

This results in a long pause between the early relatively ineffective beat and the next regular beat. This long pause allows the heart a long time to fill with blood. The first beat after the long pause then results in the heart ejecting a large amount of blood. This causes a very strong pulse for that particular beat. The net result then is a faint beat with very little blood being pumped out, followed by a very strong beat with lots of blood being ejected.

Almost everyone tends to have these occasionally and may never even know it. They occur more frequently as people get older. As a result you will see more of them in a group of 50-year-olds then you will in a group of 25-year-olds. Also you will see more of them in 70-year-olds than you do in 50-year-olds.

In many instances such beats don't mean a thing and they're not an indication of serious heart disease. Often they are stimulated to occur because of the use of excess amounts of coffee, smoking cigarettes and the use of alcohol. Digestive upsets and even nervous tension can contribute to their frequency.

In other instances they are important. A good example is their occurence in a person who has just had a heart attack. In this instance they may precede the development of more important and sometimes dangerous irregularities of the heart. For more information about the various irregularities and their importance send 50 cents for The Health Letter, number 6-12, Heart Irregularities, Skipped Beats, Tachycardias. Send a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope for mailing. Address your letter to me in care of this newspaper, P. O. Box 1551, Radio City Station, New York, NY 10019.

Their true significance has to be judged in the light of a fairly complete heart examination to see what the status of the heart really is. Meanwhile if you have the habit of smoking cigarettes, drinking lots of coffee or consuming very much alcohol, I would recommend discontinuing these habits. You will feel better for a lot of reasons besides those strong beats you are talking about.

Cleveland group records the opera 'Porgy and Bess'

The Plain Dealer

CLEVELAND (AP) — In an era when even opera companies in America don't record operas, the Cleveland Orchestra and Chorus has done so.

London Records has just released the Cleveland recording of the George Gershwin opera, "Porgy and Bess."

Operas are rarely recorded in the United States because of the cost. Even if a record company has a great American singer in its stable, the opera recording is almost always done in Europe.

The last opera recorded in the United States was the Leonard Bernstein "Carmen" three years ago, and over the last years there has been a total of perhaps four.

So how did Cleveland do it?

In part by working fast, holding down costs, and in part because its previous Gershwin works under conductor Lorin Maazel have done well for London Records.

Maazel has been conducting a good bit of Gershwin and liked the idea. There had never been a complete "Porgy and Bess" recorded. This three-record version is complete.

One of the measures that might be called cost-effective was the production last summer of "Porgy and Bess" at nearby Blossom Music Center, a suburban outdoor facility between Cleveland and Akron that seats thousands and draws top-name touring performances. In effect, it was a rehearsal for the recording sessions.

And it was possible with a folk opera to find splendid but unknown singers who would not bankrupt the undertakings.

The case of the bumped skier

By JACK STRAUSS, LL.B.

Marion was learning to ski in several sittings. Her hardest sitting, however, occurred on the side of a small hill where she was taking a beginner's class. Slushing down the hill at top speed, Ira collided with her and dumped her into a snowdrift. When pulled out, Marion sued Ira for causing her to suffer a pair of broken legs.

"Before the accident," she complained in court, "my legs were without equal. Since they've been broken, they're without parallel -- and it's all Ira's fault. He should have seen me and gone around me. After all, had he been driving an automobile, he would have been required to avoid me."

"But, I wasn't driving an automobile," was Ira's answer. "I was on skis. Since I was coming down the hill, Marion should have gotten out of my way. We're just lucky we weren't both killed."

IF YOU WERE THE JUDGE, would you hold Ira liable for Marions's dumping?

This is how the judge ruled: YES! The judge held, in effect, that the "rule of the road" is as applicable to skiing as it is to operating an automobile. An overtaking skier in control of his movement is required to yield to skiers below, where he is able to see them. And, concluded the judge, he has a duty to keep a proper lookout so that he can see and avoid them.

The case of the bumped skier

By JACK STRAUSS, LL.B.

Marion was learning to ski in several sittings. Her hardest sitting, however, occurred on the side of a small hill where she was taking a beginner's class. Slushing down the hill at top speed, Ira collided with her and dumped her into a snowdrift. When pulled out, Marion sued Ira for causing her to suffer a pair of broken legs.

"Before the accident," she complained in court, "my legs were without equal. Since they've been broken, they're without parallel -- and it's all Ira's fault. He should have seen me and gone around me. After all, had he been driving an automobile, he would have been required to avoid me."

"But, I wasn't driving an automobile," was Ira's answer. "I was on skis. Since I was coming down the hill, Marion should have gotten out of my way. We're just lucky we weren't both killed."

IF YOU WERE THE JUDGE, would you hold Ira liable for Marions's dumping?

This is how the judge ruled: YES! The judge held, in effect, that the "rule of the road" is as applicable to skiing as it is to operating an automobile. An overtaking skier in control of his movement is required to yield to skiers below, where he is able to see them. And, concluded the judge, he has a duty to keep a proper lookout so that he can see and avoid them.

Ives Scholar-Pianist Performing

By MARY CAMPBELL
AP Newsfeatures

It was difficult to get the late American composer Charles Ives to answer a queston. He'd use it, according to those who knew him, as a springboard for another question or thought.

But, in 1935, before pianist John Kirkpatrick had met Ives, he sent some written questions about "The Concord Sonata," including which version to use at a certain point. Back came an answer, in Mrs. Ives's writing, "Do whatever seems natural or best to you but not necessarily the same way each time."

Kirkpatrick says, "There is a great deal of resource material for all four movements of 'Concord.' I combine whatever seems most advantageous to the presentation of the ideas. That is a constant growth on my part, in appreciating what the idea is and could be and also in evaluating the different resources. From year to year that changes." His own two recordings of "Concord," for Columbia, out in 1948 and 1969, are very different.

"Most composers I have known have more or less that point of view toward their own music. They expect the performer to contribute something even if only in proportioning the flow of ideas. Ives wanted you to feel free to change a note or a few notes if you felt it was necessary.

"He had a wonderful thing he said, 'These notes and near-pictures of sound are in a way a platform for the player to make his own speeches on.' "

Kirkpatrick, born in New York, is 70, retired from teaching — at Cornell from 1946 to '68 and at Yale from 1968 to '73 -- and is curator of the largest Ives collection anywhere, at Yale, and sometimes gives piano concerts. He and violinist Daniel Stepner have given three this year, the third in Town Hall, New York March 8, and have a few more planned, mostly on college campuses. They may record together.

"I perform when I feel that I've got to say something," Kirkpatrick says. "This new piece by Carl Ruggles and the particular slant Stepner and I feel that we have been privileged to dream up with regard to the Ives violin sonata -- I think I've got to get that said. Otherwise I'm Grandpa and like to leave concerts to the youngsters."

Kirkpatrick knew both Ives and Ruggles. That came about, he says, "because they were interesting. I got to know their music and found their music interesting and wanted to see what they were like. In my taste, Ives and Ruggles stand out above other 20th-century composers."

Ruggles isn't nearly as well known as Ives, Kirkpatrick says, "largely because of his very small output. He was such a terrific perfectionist. He had a difficult style. It was bound up with the concept of nonrepetition of notes in the melodic line, but not like the 12-tone composers do. He called 12-tone composing 'a dog chasing its tail.' He would use about eight or nine notes — he didn't make himself use them all. He did it rhapsodically and freely. He wanted to avoid any sense of method.

"We only have about a dozen pieces. Ruggles destroyed all his earlier music. A few things have happened to escape that he had forgotten about, like two early songs that were found as copyright deposit copies in the Library of Congress. They're quite beautiful examples of late 19th-century writing. As he would have said himself, 'They go to town.' "

"Mood," the "new" Ruggles work that Kirkpatrick and Stepner are performing this season is one that Kirkpatrick found when Ruggles asked him to sort his compositions. "I think it probably dates to around 1918. His earliest acknowledged work is 1919. It is a piece he probably meant to destroy. He never told me about it. When I found it and it looked complete, I didn't quite dare show it to him or ask him about it. I thought he would destroy it. It looked far too good to suffer that fate."

Ives also destroyed compositions, Kirkpatrick says, being a man who saved everything then would have a burst of cleaning out and in the process would throw out more than he meant to.

There aren't more Ives and Ruggles scores to find, Kirkpatrick says, but there are a number of Ives scores still to be edited, and Kirkpatrick is doing that. "Part of it is trying to define what the lost organ parts to various church anthems by Ives might have been. Most exist only in voice parts with a few sketchy indications of the organ part, which is lost. I work from a few sketchy cues. Some of his early anthems have stumped me. One that I've done that way and is published is his setting of Tennyson's 'Crossing the Bar.' I think he was about 77 when he wrote it and it is probably the best thing he had written so far. My wife feels that the greater the poet, the greater the music that will be drawn out of the composer."

Kirkpatrick started in music "when I was put at the piano, in a well-behaved Victorian family, and it took. Then music was the only thing I was interested in. College and I parted company and I went to France to study music. I very luckily made the acquaintance of Nadia Boulanger, studying harmony and a little counterpoint and a lot of analysis with her. Most of my piano work was with Lonta Nouneberg.

"I have no talent for composing. I like to think because I'm no composer and have no ideas of my own, I am a good editor. I have no individuality to mess up anything with."

About performances of Ives' music he has heard, Kirkpatrick says, "I think many of them don't aim high enough. Ives performances are apt to be too content with presenting his adventurousness and the surprising ways he anticipated everybody and his dissonance, but I rarely hear Ives performances that try to reveal the spiritual nature of his music. I think Ives would have regarded as one of the most important things he said, 'The only hope of mankind is the unseen spirit.'

"Ives has been taken to task for following Emerson's aesthetics, which were not very well developed. But actually what he did was base his aesthetics on Emerson's philosophy, which was extremely sophisticated and extremely visionary and advanced in the best sense."

Kirkpatrick teamed up with violinist Stepner after hearing him play Bach's "C Major Sonata" and keep its 14-minute fugue sounding fresh. He says, "I don't know any other young violinist who is so completely devoted to the innermost spirit of the music and so intelligent about it."

Ives Scholar-Pianist Performing

By MARY CAMPBELL
AP Newsfeatures

It was difficult to get the late American composer Charles Ives to answer a queston. He'd use it, according to those who knew him, as a springboard for another question or thought.

But, in 1935, before pianist John Kirkpatrick had met Ives, he sent some written questions about "The Concord Sonata," including which version to use at a certain point. Back came an answer, in Mrs. Ives's writing, "Do whatever seems natural or best to you but not necessarily the same way each time."

Kirkpatrick says, "There is a great deal of resource material for all four movements of 'Concord.' I combine whatever seems most advantageous to the presentation of the ideas. That is a constant growth on my part, in appreciating what the idea is and could be and also in evaluating the different resources. From year to year that changes." His own two recordings of "Concord," for Columbia, out in 1948 and 1969, are very different.

"Most composers I have known have more or less that point of view toward their own music. They expect the performer to contribute something even if only in proportioning the flow of ideas. Ives wanted you to feel free to change a note or a few notes if you felt it was necessary.

"He had a wonderful thing he said, 'These notes and near-pictures of sound are in a way a platform for the player to make his own speeches on.' "

Kirkpatrick, born in New York, is 70, retired from teaching — at Cornell from 1946 to '68 and at Yale from 1968 to '73 — and is curator of the largest Ives collection anywhere, at Yale, and sometimes gives piano concerts. He and violinist Daniel Stepner have given three this year, the third in Town Hall, New York March 8, and have a few more planned, mostly on college campuses. They may record together.

"I perform when I feel that I've got to say something," Kirkpatrick says. "This new piece by Carl Ruggles and the particular slant Stepner and I feel that we have been privileged to dream up with regard to the Ives violin sonata — I think I've got to get that said. Otherwise I'm Grandpa and like to leave concerts to the youngsters."

Kirkpatrick knew both Ives and Ruggles. That came about, he says, "because they were interesting. I got to know their music and found their music interesting and wanted to see what they were like. In my taste, Ives and Ruggles stand out above other 20th-century composers."

Ruggles isn't nearly as well known as Ives, Kirkpatrick says, "largely because of his very small output. He was such a terrific perfectionist. He had a difficult style. It was bound up with the concept of nonrepetition of notes in the melodic line, but not like the 12-tone composers do. He called 12-tone composing 'a dog chasing its tail.' He would use about eight or nine notes — he didn't make himself use them all. He did it rhapsodically and freely. He wanted to avoid any sense of method.

"We only have about a dozen pieces. Ruggles destroyed all his earlier music. A few things have happened to escape that he had forgotten about, like two early songs that were found as copyright deposit copies in the Library of Congress. They're quite beautiful examples of late 19th-century writing. As he would have said himself, 'They go to town.' "

"Mood," the "new" Ruggles work that Kirkpatrick and Stepner are performing this season is one that Kirkpatrick found when Ruggles asked him to sort his compositions. "I think it probably dates to around 1918. His earliest acknowledged work is 1919. It is a piece he probably meant to destroy. He never told me about it. When I found it and it looked complete, I didn't quite dare show it to him or ask him about it. I thought he would destroy it. It looked far too good to suffer that fate."

Ives also destroyed compositions, Kirkpatrick says, being a man who saved everything then would have a burst of cleaning out and in the process would throw out more than he meant to.

There aren't more Ives and Ruggles scores to find, Kirkpatrick says, but there are a number of Ives scores still to be edited, and Kirkpatrick is doing that. "Part of it is trying to define what the lost organ parts to various church anthems by Ives might have been. Most exist only in voice parts with a few sketchy indications of the organ part, which is lost. I work from a few sketchy cues. Some of his early anthems have stumped me. One that I've done that way and is published is his setting of Tennyson's 'Crossing the Bar.' I think he was about 77 when he wrote it and it is probably the best thing he had written so far. My wife feels that the greater the poet, the greater the music that will be drawn out of the composer."

Kirkpatrick started in music "when I was put at the piano, in a well-behaved Victorian family, and it took. Then music was the only thing I was interested in. College and I parted company and I went to France to study music. I very luckily made the acquaintance of Nadia Boulanger, studying harmony and a little counterpoint and a lot of analysis with her. Most of my piano work was with Lonta Nouneberg.

"I have no talent for composing. I like to think because I'm no composer and have no ideas of my own, I am a good editor. I have no individuality to mess up anything with."

About performances of Ives' music he has heard, Kirkpatrick says, "I think many of them don't aim high enough. Ives performances are apt to be too content with presenting his adventurousness and the surprising ways he anticipated everybody and his dissonance, but I rarely hear Ives performances that try to reveal the spiritual nature of his music. I think Ives would have regarded as one of the most important things he said, 'The only hope of mankind is the unseen spirit.'

"Ives has been taken to task for following Emerson's aesthetics, which were not very well developed. But actually what he did was base his aesthetics on Emerson's philosophy, which was extremely sophisticated and extremely visionary and advanced in the best sense."

Kirkpatrick teamed up with violinist Stepner after hearing him play Bach's "C Major Sonata" and keep its 14-minute fugue sounding fresh. He says, "I don't know any other young violinist who is so completely devoted to the innermost spirit of the music and so intelligent about it."

A Bicentennial look at Marriot Corp.

Marriot opened with root beer stand

SANTA CLARA, Calif. (AP) — In 1927, J. Williard Marriott opened a nine-stool root beer stand in Washington, D.C., financed mostly with high hopes.

In the 49 years since then, Marriott's Hot Shoppe has grown into a three-quarter billion dollar worldwide conglomerate of hotels and resorts, restaurants, airline caterers and cruise ships.

Now Marriott has taken a $140-million leap into the amusement park business. Two identical 65-acre parks, both called Great America, will combine peaches-and-cream, turn-of-the-century nostalgia with dozens of thrill rides, restaurants and gift shops.

The first park, which includes a reproduction of Marriott's original root beer stand, opened a month ago 45 miles south of San Francisco where a pear orchard once flourished. It's expected to attract 2.8 million visitors and gross $33 million over a 140-day season this year.

The second park will open north of Chicago on May 29, and a third is planned for the Washington area.

The parks are a seeming departure for Marriott Corp., second only to Holiday Inn in total lodging dollars and McDonald's in total food dollars. But J. W. Marriott Jr., president and chief executive officer, says he "couldn't be more optimistic about this new business of ours.

"We know, for instance, that about 40 per cent of Disney World's revenues come from food services and lodging. As successful specialists in those fields, Great America ... fits well into our policies and abilities."

With 19 restaurants inside the park, "we have more food service than any other park of this kind," he said. A Marriott Inn also is going up nearby for visitors who want to stay overnight.

Another good reason for entering the field, said Marriott, is that theme parks like Great America and Disneyland "are one of the real growth segments of the leisure time industry.

"Attendance has grown almost 400 per cent in 10 years. Last year, it was 40 per cent greater than the combined number of spectators at professional football, baseball and basketall games. Family entertainment is coming back in full force."

Visitors are bound to compare Great America with Disneyland, and Marriott officials believe this will work positively for them.

"It's good if people think we're of the Disneyland quality," said Bruce Burtch, the park's public affairs manager.

Like Disneyland, Great America is divided into sections or "themed areas." Disney has Frontierland and Mainstreet, U.S.A; Great America has Yukon Territory and Hometown Square, among others.

Marriott also has purchased the rights to Warner Bros. cartoon characters so that Bugs Bunny, Porky Pig, Daffy Duck and 21 others can roam the park, just like Alice in Wonderland and Donald Duck at Disneyland. There are Bugs Bunny T-shirts for sale at Great America, and Bugs Bunny hats and even a Bugs Bunny watch.

"Our answer to the Mickey Mouse watch," said Burtch.

Although Bugs Bunny is sometimes referred to as "Great America's host and spokesrabbit," Burtch said the cartoon characters are primarily "merchandise ideas that work well in amusement parks.

"Mickey Mouse is the symbol for Disney, but Bugs Bunny will never be the symbol for Great America. It's just an aid in marketing, merchandising and entertaining."

The decision to build an amusement park apparently scared some stockholders — the stock plunged from about $28 a share to $6 after the plans were announced. It has since rebounded to about $17.

Earnings in 1975 were 68 cents a share, and so far are up 26 per cent in fiscal 1976, the company says. Sales are expected to reach nearly $900 million this year, up 15 per cent from fiscal 1975.

When Marriott decided to enter the amusement park business, corporation executives conducted a search of competing parks and recruited a management team with more than 500 combined years of experience in the business.

Hired as general manager was Truman Woodworth, a Disney cameraman in the depression who later rose to director of facilities at Disneyland. Marriott gave Mel Miller, a former curator of the Ringling Bros. circus museum, responsibility for Great America's atmosphere and authenticity.

To design the park, Marriott hired Randall Duell, a former Hollywood set designer who was also the architect for Six Flags, the Carrowinds and other major theme parks.

Marriott also hired a research company to conduct demographic studies and find the best available park locations. The final sites were chosen for two reasons — no major competition within 200 miles, and when all three parks are completed, 70 per cent of the nation's population will be within a 500-mile radius of one of them.

"We can turn on an entire service industry conglomerate," said Burtch. "Every Marriott employe in the world (46,000) will be wearing a 'Visit Great America' button."

Divorce increase in Missouri

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. (AP) — The number of divorces granted in the state last year was 11 per cent more than the 1974 total, according to the Missouri Center for Health Statistics.

In releasing final 1975 figures today, the center reported there were 24,522 marriages dissolved, continuing a 15-year upward trend for divorces. Last year there was one couple divorced for every 2.4 couples wed.

The statistics are based on the 12-month period which ended last December. Estimates released in January showed the divorce rate was going to be about 8 per cent over the 1974 figures.

Marriages declined for the third consecutive year during 1975 when an average of 10.4 marriages were performed for each 1,000 population in the state. It was 4 per cent under the marriage rate in 1974.

Missouri recorded its lowest 12-month mortality rate ever during 1975, experiencing 10.4 deaths per 1,000 population.

The state's death total has decreased in each of the last three years, the center said. Infant mortality fell to an all-time low rate of 16.6 infant deaths per 1,000 live births. Missouri has experienced fewer infant deaths each year since 1971.

Foremost is fined by Supreme Court

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. (AP) — The Missouri Supreme Court ordered a Springfield dairy today to pay $30,000 in fines as resolution of charges that the company violated the state's Unfair Milk Sales Practices Act.

The order against the Foremost Foods Co., adopted unanimously by the seven-member court, ends 18 months of leitigation involving the first legal attempt to enforce provisions of the 1959 law, which is intended to limit unfair competition in the dairy industry.

The court-ordered fine is in additon to compliance with provisions set out in a consent decree agreed to last November by Atty. Gen. John Danforth and company officials, according to Brook Bartlett, assistant attorney general.

That order required Foremost to pay $17,500 for costs of the state investigation leading up to resolution of the case anc another $6,700 in license fees the company had failed to pay the state Agriculture Department in the past.

The company, while making no admission that it violated the law, also agreed to refrain from any illegal sales practices and institute stringent sales and billing procedures recently proscribed by Agriculture Director James Biollot.

The case against Foremost, filed on Nov. 8, 1974, resulted from an intense investigation of milk sales practices in southwest Missouri during early 1974 by the Agriculture Department and Danforth's office. It was prompted by soaring retail milk prices in the area, heart of Missouri's dairy indsutry.

That probe found numerous instances of kickbacks, free equipment and services, cash gifts and rebates between milk wholesalers and retailers.

Another southwest Missouri company, Hiland Dairy, was also charged with violations of the milk law at the same time as Foremost. But Hiland officials have refused to enter into a settlement and that case is expected to be tried before the high court.

A third company, Fairmont Foods Co. of Kansas City, is involved in an administrative proceedings before Boillot in connection with alleged violations of the milk law. A decision in that case is pending.

The settlement of the Foremost case, reached between Danforth and the company, was initially submitted to L. Frank Cottey, a special high-court commissioner named to review the initial proceedings in the case.

Cottey urged the Supreme Court not to accept the settlehent, contending it undercut the original suti against the firm which sought revocation of its operating charter.

He claimed that because the settlement calls for either party to come before the Supreme Court in the future for further orders in the matter, adoption of the settlement would "signal the end of the case as a case and inaugurates it as a career."

Cottey admitted the resolution was probably the best that could be reached under the circumstances. But he said the matter should be argued fully before the high court before any decision was made. No hearings were held in the matter, however.

Marriot opened with root beer stand

SANTA CLARA, Calif. (AP) — In 1927, J. Williard Marriott opened a nine-stool root beer stand in Washington, D.C., financed mostly with high hopes.

In the 49 years since then, Marriott's Hot Shoppe has grown into a three-quarter billion dollar worldwide conglomerate of hotels and resorts, restaurants, airline caterers and cruise ships.

Now Marriott has taken a $140-million leap into the amusement park business. Two identical 65-acre parks, both called Great America, will combine peaches-and-cream, turn-of-the-century nostalgia with dozens of thrill rides, restaurants and gift shops.

The first park, which includes a reproduction of Marriott's original root beer stand, opened a month ago 45 miles south of San Francisco where a pear orchard once flourished. It's expected to attract 2.8 million visitors and gross $33 million over a 140-day season this year.

The second park will open north of Chicago on May 29, and a third is planned for the Washington area.

The parks are a seeming departure for Marriott Corp., second only to Holiday Inn in total lodging dollars and McDonald's in total food dollars. But J. W. Marriott Jr., president and chief executive officer, says he "couldn't be more optimistic about this new business of ours.

"We know, for instance, that about 40 per cent of Disney World's revenues come from food services and lodging. As successful specialists in those fields, Great America ... fits well into our policies and abilities."

With 19 restaurants inside the park, "we have more food service than any other park of this kind," he said. A Marriott Inn also is going up nearby for visitors who want to stay overnight.

Another good reason for entering the field, said Marriott, is that theme parks like Great America and Disneyland "are one of the real growth segments of the leisure time industry.

"Attendance has grown almost 400 per cent in 10 years. Last year, it was 40 per cent greater than the combined number of spectators at professional football, baseball and basketall games. Family entertainment is coming back in full force."

Visitors are bound to compare Great America with Disneyland, and Marriott officials believe this will work positively for them.

"It's good if people think we're of the Disneyland quality," said Bruce Burtch, the park's public affairs manager.

Like Disneyland, Great America is divided into sections or "themed areas." Disney has Frontierland and Mainstreet, U.S.A; Great America has Yukon Territory and Hometown Square, among others.

Marriott also has purchased the rights to Warner Bros. cartoon characters so that Bugs Bunny, Porky Pig, Daffy Duck and 21 others can roam the park, just like Alice in Wonderland and Donald Duck at Disneyland. There are Bugs Bunny T-shirts for sale at Great America, and Bugs Bunny hats and even a Bugs Bunny watch.

"Our answer to the Mickey Mouse watch," said Burtch.

Although Bugs Bunny is sometimes referred to as "Great America's host and spokesrabbit," Burtch said the cartoon characters are primarily "merchandise ideas that work well in amusement parks.

"Mickey Mouse is the symbol for Disney, but Bugs Bunny will never be the symbol for Great America. It's just an aid in marketing, merchandising and entertaining."
